Choosing a school in Beijing is one of the most difficult and important decisions that families in Beijing have to make. beijingkids' third annual School Choice Guide is here to make sense of it all: from curricula to locations, tuition fees, environment, and after school activities. With detailed, easy-to-read listings of the city's top 62 schools, parents can make an informed decision on their child's education. To navigate the school scene, we also have the inside scoop on helping your teen prep for middle school (p24) and choosing a school with a bilingual curriculum (p28). If it's the variety of curricula that perplexes you, we've got a breakdown of the most popular education systems (p10). Just remember: There is a perfect school for every child – it's just a matter of finding the right fit.

Advanced Placement Program (AP)

The AP (Advanced Placement) program is a system of course work administered by the College Board – the same organization that administers the SAT, a standardized college admissions test in the US. The AP program is a high school curriculum that offers standardized courses that are considered to be the equivalent of an undergraduate university course. An AP exam is taken at the end of the course. Based on this exam score, students (once they're accepted) can earn university credit, giving them time to take higher-level courses, pursue a double major, or study abroad.

Who does it target?

AP courses are generally taken by Grade 11-12 students (16-18 years old).

How is it applied?

The College Board offers a total of 34 AP subjects. Some of the most popular courses include AP US History, AP English Literature, and AP Calculus AB. AP students receive two grades: one for AP coursework and another for the AP exam. AP tests are taken in May and graded on a scale of 1 to 5 (5 being the highest). A computer scores the multiple-choice section, while AP readers grade the free response and essay components. Though it varies from institution to institution, most universities require that students obtain a minimum grade of 3 or 4 to qualify for college credit. The tests are graded by The College Board, but students also have access to third-party test verification services for extra integrity.

Why should parents consider it?

High achievers are usually recommended for the AP program by their teachers. Because AP classes are so rigorous, students should only take as many as they can comfortably handle. It's a way for them to challenge themselves and show prospective colleges that they are serious about academics.

How well does this education system prepare students for the real world?

This is a chance for high school students to get a glimpse into university work, and most universities in the US will look at a student's final exam score from AP courses as part of the selection process. Outside the US, universities in over 60 countries recognize AP exam scores for admission or college credit.

More Clean air for the ones you care about

A small amount of pure air is not enough, here in Beijing you need a lot of it
Chris Buckley PhD, founder of Torana Clean Air

At Torana we understand that it isn't just filter performance that matters in a purifier, it's the amount of air flowing through it. This is why our Blueair purifiers have 1) true HEPA filters optimized for removing ultrafine PM2.5 pollution and 2) more than twice the airflow of ordinary air purifiers. It's why Blueair was rated #1 for cleaning in tests carried out by Consumer Reports of America and has a higher Clean Air Delivery Rate (CADR) than can be measured in AHAM testing*. Blueair also removes formaldehyde, VOCs, dust, pollen and is certified 100% ozone-free.

SAT and ACT

The SAT Reasoning Test (commonly known as the SAT), like the AP program and examinations, is administered by The College Board, an educational association based in the US. It is a standardized test, used in college admissions to American universities. Most students take the SAT in their junior or senior year of high school. The ACT is another standardized test for university admissions. Administered by ACT, Inc., it was created in 1959 as a competitor to the SAT. In 2009, 45 percent of American high school students took the ACT test.

It was formerly assumed that all universities in the US would base their selections to a certain extent on SAT scores. It should be noted, however, that current trends in education have shifted regarding the importance of both these tests. The National Centre for Fair and Open Testing in the US recently reported that 850 higher-education institutions in the US, including top-ranking universities, currently do not require SAT or ACT scores to admit students.

Famous alumni:

There are thousands of websites reporting the SAT scores of famous people like Microsoft co-founders Bill Gates (1590) and Paul Allen (a perfect 1600), horror writer Stephen King (1300), and former president George W. Bush (1206). These scores reflect the old SAT system, which carried a maximum possible grade of 1600.

Who does it target?

The ACT, and the SAT are generally taken by Grade 11-12 students (16-18 years old).

How is it applied?

The SAT test lasts over three hours and is divided into three sections: Critical Reading, Writing, and Math. Each section is made up of multiple choice questions, but the writing portion also requires students to compose a short essay. As of 2005, the SAT became known as the SAT Reasoning Test and the maximum possible score was changed to 2400 (800 per section).

The ACT lasts four hours and includes four parts: English, Math, Reading, and Science Reasoning. The optional ACT writing test adds 30 minutes to the exam time. Scored out of a maximum 36 points, ACT questions are generally considered to be easier than the SAT's, but the relatively limited time allotted to each section evens out the overall level of difficulty.

Why should parents consider it?

While not all American colleges require the SAT and ACT exam scores, a vast majority do require at least one of them, so taking them is a good idea for students that are interested in attending a university in the US.

Where is it offered?

Beijing BISS International School (BISS): SAT test center
 Beijing City International School (BCIS): Offers SAT prep
 Beijing Shuren-Ribet Private School (BSRPS): ACT/SAT test center
 International School of Beijing (ISB): SAT/ACT test center
 The Learning Center (TLC): Offers SAT prep
 St. Paul American School (SPAS): Offers SAT prep

How well does this education system prepare students for the real world?

Standardized tests like the ACT and SAT assess how well students analyze and problem-solve – skills that they are expected to acquire in high school. Most universities in the US will still look at SAT/ACT scores as part of the selection process. Some universities outside of the US will also consider SAT scores when assessing applicants.

"At BISS, we are providing our students with a 21st century education. We are educating them for their future, not for our past."

English National Curriculum

The English National Curriculum was developed by the British government for standard use in England, Wales, and Northern Ireland. It is used in over 30,000 schools in the UK and overseas. This education system is characterized by a broad, well-rounded education that narrows in focus by the time students reach Year 11.

Famous alumni:

David Cameron (UK prime minister), Kazuo Ishiguro (novelist), Emma Watson (actress)

Who does it target?

The English National Curriculum targets students 3-18 years of age. They are divided into Key Stages that cover both primary and secondary school:

- Key Stage 0: Ages 3-5 (also known as Early Years)
- Key Stage 1: Ages 5-7 (Year 1-2)
- Key Stage 2: Ages 7-11 (Year 3-6)
- Key Stage 3: Ages 11-14 (Year 7-9)
- Key Stage 4: Ages 14-16 (Year 10-11)
- Key Stage 5: Ages 16-18 (Year 12-13)

How is it applied?

Primary school students are assessed at the end of Key Stages 1 to 3 on a scale of 1 to 8 according to National Curriculum standards. These evaluations are based on both tests and teacher assessments, and are commonly known as "SATs" or Standard Assessment Tasks (not to be confused with the American SAT).

At the end of Year 11, students can sit up to ten subjects at a series of national exams known as the GCSEs (General Certificate of Secondary Education).

During Key Stage 5, students take the GCE Advanced Level exams, commonly known as A-levels. A-levels are a graduated system composed of AS levels (taken at the end of Year 12) and A2 levels (taken at the end of Year 13). Students cannot move on to A2 levels if they fail their AS exams. Universities in the UK will usually ask for at least three A-levels, with some requiring a fourth AS subject.

Why should parents consider it?

A-levels give students the freedom to choose their areas of study and focus on their strengths. For example, an honor student who is working towards a scholarship in biology might not want to devote much time to the arts.

Where is it offered?

- Beijing New Talent Academy (BJNTA): Hybrid system with Chinese National Curriculum
- The British School of Beijing (BSB): Complete curriculum
- Dulwich College Beijing: Up to Year 9
- Harrow International School Beijing: Complete curriculum
- MOMA Kids International Kindergarten: Early education program with elements of the English National Curriculum
- Prestige Education Center (PEC): Weekend school based on English National Curriculum
- Windsor Bilingual Kindergarten: Elements of English National Curriculum and Chinese system
- Yew Chung International School of Beijing (YCIS Beijing): Up to Year 11

How well does this education system prepare students for the real world?

The British education system is well-recognized and accepted all over the world. A-levels are the standard qualification for universities in the UK, and help students focus on preferred subjects before applying to university. In addition, A-levels are generally accepted in the US and Europe, as well as former Commonwealth countries like Australia and India.

"British education is distinguished by its ability to adapt to a changing world while retaining strong continuity of focus. British qualifications are international qualifications that are recognized worldwide; all universities accept A-levels as an entry qualification. The

A-level system takes account of students' individual aptitude, remains flexible enough to accommodate a variety of courses, has an emphasis on critical thinking, and aims to give students leadership opportunities in every sphere of life. Also integrating charitable and community service, the British curriculum is diverse and designed to meet the needs of the individual [through] creative classrooms, motivated students and great learning opportunities."

CHINA'S ONLY UK GOVERNMENT
INSPECTED & ACCREDITED SCHOOL

International Baccalaureate (IB)

Formerly known as the IBO, the International Baccalaureate (IB) is a non-profit educational foundation headquartered in Geneva, Switzerland. It was founded in 1968 and is administered by a board of governors and six permanent committees that handle policy and best governance practices.

The IB is divided into three programs that can be applied individually or as a whole: the Primary Years Programme or PYP (ages 3-12), the Middle Years Programme or MYP (ages 11-16), and the Diploma Programme or IBDP (ages 16-19). Institutions that are authorized to offer one or more of these programs are known as IB World Schools. According to the IB's official website, there are over 976,000 students studying at 3,295 IB World Schools in 141 countries around the world.

Famous alumni:

Julie Payette (astronaut), Gael García Bernal (actor), Karen Mok (actress and singer)

Who does it target?

As a whole, the IB's programs target students 3-19 years of age.

How is it applied?

All of the IB's programs share the following traits:
 They require study across a broad range of subjects.
 They emphasize language learning.
 They encourage interdisciplinary learning.
 They include a community service requirement.

Each of the IB's programs has its own curriculum, but IBDP is the best-known. Over two years, students study six subjects drawn from the following subject groups: the arts, experimental sciences, language acquisition, studies in language and literature, individuals and society, and mathematics and computer science. Normally, half of these subjects are higher-level courses (240 teaching hours) and the other half are standard-level courses (150 teaching hours).

Other hallmarks of the IBDP include Theory of Knowledge (TOK), CAS, and the extended essay. TOK is a compulsory course that focuses on critical thinking and the nature of knowledge. CAS stands for "Creativity, Action, and Service," reflecting the belief that students should pursue activities outside the classroom. The extended essay is a 4,000-word paper designed to prepare students for undergraduate work.

IBDP students are graded on a scale from 1 to 7 (7 being the highest). They can also gain up to three extra points for their combined results on TOK and the extended essay, bringing the maximum total grade to 45 points. The IB diploma is awarded to students who obtain at least 24 points and satisfy their requirements in CAS. In general, about 80 percent of students obtain the diploma after being examined; fewer than 1 percent achieve a perfect score.

Why should parents consider it?

The IB has a 43-year history of high-quality, international education. Its programs are accepted at universities around the world. IB World Schools go through a rigorous authorization and evaluation process and IB teachers participate in a variety of professional development events. The IB has a distinct focus on international education, making it one of the most popular choices for expat families in Beijing.

Where is it offered?

- Beijing BISS International School: Full IB program
- Beijing City International School (BCIS): Full IB program
- Beijing Huijia Private School: Full IB program
- Beijing No. 55 High School: MYP and IBDP
- Beijing World Youth Academy (BWYA): MYP, IBDP

- Dulwich College Beijing (DCB): IBDP
- International School of Beijing (ISB): IBDP
- The Learning Center (TLC): Tutoring only
- Western Academy of Beijing (WAB): Full IB program
- Yew Chung International School (YCIS Beijing): IBDP

How well does this education system prepare students for the real world?

The IB diploma is accepted by over 2,000 universities in 75 countries. In addition, the IB programs provide students with an international skill set, including knowledge of a second language, advanced critical thinking skills, dedication to community service, and the ability to appreciate different cultures.

"At the International School of Beijing, we focus on learning that will provide students with skills they need to meet future challenges and opportunities. Our curriculum structure Learning21@ISB is a simple yet comprehensive Pre-K to 12 framework that layers a strong sense of purpose and vision on top of an excellent academic program. We explicitly and comprehensively help students develop creativity and innovation; collaboration and communication; inquiry, critical thinking and problem solving; global thinking; and leadership and responsibility. We believe that L21 will kindle and sustain the type of learning that can take our students into the future with confidence."

– Greg Curtis, director of curriculum,
International School of Beijing

"The International Baccalaureate Programme empowers young people to develop the skills and abilities to become the leaders and caregivers of tomorrow's world. Through a programme of inquiry, students are required to 'go deeper' with their learning, fully understanding the content as it applies to the world around them! The aim of all IB programmes is to develop students who become internationally minded citizens who employ creativity, innovation, problem-solving, collaboration, caring, open-minded and multiple linguistic skills."

– Douglas K. Prescott,
head of Canadian International School of Beijing

Montessori

The Montessori motto is “Help me do it by myself.” This approach is founded on the belief that every child should be respected as an individual and allowed to learn at his or her own pace within the prepared environment of a classroom. Montessori education fosters intelligent thinking, independence, self-esteem, problem-solving skills, and social aptitude.

Founder Dr. Maria Montessori (1870-1952) noticed that kids experienced “windows of opportunity” as they grew. She based the Montessori method on years of first-hand observations of students in the classroom. As the first woman to graduate from the University of Rome Medical School, Dr. Montessori brought a scientific approach to the field of education.

Famous alumni:

Sergey Brin and Larry Page (co-founders of Google), Jimmy Wales (founder of Wikipedia), Dakota Fanning (actress)

Who does it target?

Globally, Montessori schools vary widely in the age range of their students. They run the gamut from birth to adulthood (0-18 years), but the majority focus on early childhood education (1-6 years). Most of the institutions in Beijing fall into the latter category, but MSB and Daystar offer Montessori education for kids up to age 12.

How is it applied?

Though there are several Montessori societies worldwide, the term

“Montessori” itself isn’t trademarked. That’s why it’s crucial for parents to visit their child’s prospective school. Prominent societies like the American Montessori Society (AMS) formulate their own standards and accredit schools. In Beijing, MSB is the only AMS affiliate member.

An authentic Montessori classroom features multi-age groupings, uninterrupted blocks of work time, guided activity choices, and a range of specially designed learning materials. The curriculum focuses on five basic areas: practical life, sensorial, language, math, and culture. Kids progress from simple to complex tasks while fulfilling their natural curiosity. Montessori teachers direct and guide their students rather than dictate. There are no numerical grades in Montessori. Instead, progress is tracked through observation, recordkeeping, and self-reflection. There is also no such thing as failure, since teachers present each child with a choice of work and a variety of difficulties.

Why should parents consider it?

Many child experts agree that the most important period in a child’s development happens between birth and age 6. Dr. Montessori believed that kids at this age had an “absorbent” quality, like a sponge. The idea is that the proper guidance and stimulation will allow them to form patterns for the rest of their lives. In regular daycare, the focus is often on keeping young charges entertained. The Montessori classroom is designed to meet every child’s learning needs with special tools and materials. Students can set their own pace instead of being forced to do activities they don’t like. They become part of a multi-age community, with older kids playing the role of mentors and younger kids feeling supported for the challenges ahead.

How well does this education system prepare students for the real world?

As self-directed learners, Montessori students gain transferrable skills like independence, self-esteem, and cooperation. Many Montessori schools in Beijing use a combination of educational approaches. For example, the core curriculum at MSB includes aspects of Montessori, the IB's Primary Years Programme and the British education system. The majority of its students who stayed in Beijing went on to schools like ISB, WAB, YCIS Beijing, Harrow, DCB, and BSB.

Multiple Intelligences

The theory of Multiple Intelligences (MI) was developed in 1983 by Dr. Howard Gardner, an education professor at Harvard University. He believed that the conventional notion of intelligence, based on IQ tests, didn't look at the broader picture. In other words, MI doesn't ask "How smart are you?" but rather "How are you smart?" In his groundbreaking book, Frames of Mind, Gardner came up with eight different intelligences:

- Linguistic (word smart)
- Logical-mathematical (number/reasoning smart)
- Spatial (picture smart)
- Bodily-kinesthetic (body smart)
- Musical (music smart)
- Interpersonal (people smart)
- Intrapersonal (self smart)
- Naturalist (nature smart)

Who does it target?

All ages, from preschool to adult education

How is it applied?

MI is a "theory of intelligence ... neither a specific educational method or approach." There is no "right" way to apply it. That being said, the Multiple Intelligence Institute is an international organization dedicated to the promotion of MI theory in educational settings. It proposes three "keystone practices" of pluralization, mobilization, and personalization. Pluralization means giving children the opportunity to explore topics in a variety of ways and placing value on subjects beyond language and math. Mobilization means observing and recording children's individual strengths, interests, and abilities. Personalization means translating students' unique skills and interests into actual learning experiences.

In Beijing, the Ivy Schools (Ivy Academy and Ivy Bilingual Schools) are the only institutions in China to be accredited by the MI Institute.

Why should parents consider it?

The MI theory values all students, academic subjects, and ways of learning. By going beyond the traditional focus on language and math, children are given the opportunity to discover their potential. MI theory can also inform parenting methods. The MI Institute offers an online introductory course on MI theory geared towards parents, caregivers, and other important people in a child's life.

Where is it offered?

Ivy Academy: Ages 2-6 (English-only environment)

Ivy Bilingual School (IBS): Ages 2-6 (English/Chinese environment)

Muffy's Learning Centers: Ages 2-6

How well does this education system prepare students for the real world?

MI educators would argue that multiple intelligences are the real world. By recognizing that each individual has different strengths, weaknesses, interests, and skills, and harnessing that knowledge in the classroom, teachers can help students reach their potential.

Reggio Emilia

Reggio Emilia is an approach to early childhood education named after the city of the same name in northern Italy, where communities in the surrounding villages sought a way to rebuild society after World War II. Under the leadership of founder and educator Loris Malaguzzi, Reggio Emilia evolved into a parent-led approach that spread all over the world. Malaguzzi believed that children learn through the "hundred languages" of words, movement, painting, drawing, sculpting, shadow play, music, theater, and more.

Reggio Emilia is all about relationships, including the child's relationship with family, teachers, society, and their environment. This educational approach is self-guided; kids exert a degree of control over their own learning, learn about the world through all five senses, develop meaningful relationships with other children, and have the freedom to express themselves in various ways.

Who does it target?

Reggio Emilia focuses on early childhood education (roughly ages 0-6).

How is it applied?

Reggio Emilia does not have a governing organization, accreditation system, or set curriculum. According to the North American Reggio Emilia Alliance (NAREA), Reggio Emilia is a set of “community-constructed values that have been and are continuously being translated into high-quality early childhood practices.”

The main assessment method for Reggio Emilia is observation. Teachers track the child’s progress by collecting information over long time periods. This data includes photos, notes, videos, works of art, and conversations.

In Beijing, schools tend to combine Reggio Emilia with other educational approaches. House of Knowledge International Kindergarten has the strongest Reggio Emilia influence among schools in Beijing, but its curriculum also borrows aspects of Montessori and traditional Confucian theory. Though an IB World School, the Western Academy of Beijing’s early childhood center offers a Reggio Emilia-inspired program.

Why should parents consider it?

Since Reggio Emilia revolves around family and community, parents are a crucial part of this approach. They’re considered the child’s first teacher, and are valued as partners, collaborators, and advocates for their kids. As a result, many parents extend the Reggio Emilia philosophy to the home.

Where is it offered?

Bella Growth International Kids House: Ages 2-5

House of Knowledge International Kindergarten (HoK): Ages 1-6

Western Academy of Beijing (WAB): Ages 3-4

How well does this education system prepare students for the real world?

As in Montessori, Reggio Emilia seeks to develop skills for lifelong learning. Reggio children are able to step into a new curriculum or subject with the drive and competency to acquire knowledge.

In class, students are not given any answers; instead, teachers prompt them with questions that allow them to form their own conclusions. Students apply their critical thinking skills and have the confidence to ask others for help.

“The integration of Reggio Emilia within the IB PYP at the Western Academy of Beijing is great because it encourages children to develop skills by initiating activities based on their own interests. Our highly qualified teachers are then able to help our students further develop these skills by working alongside them. In this way, teachers respond to the broad variety of needs that young children have, and, through a system of inquiry and research, students become curious and develop a love of learning. Every day our students come to school eager to try out new things, to explore and to ask questions.”

– Holly Reardon,
head of Early Childhood Education, WAB

“The Reggio Emilia philosophy focuses on the natural development of children and the relationships that they construct with others and with their environment. In our kindergarten, we view our children as competent learners who are capable of infinite discovery and have boundless potential. Our curriculum therefore is child-centered and child-directed, focusing on the children’s interests, ideas and talents. Reggio approach propels children to acquire skills of critical thinking and collaborating [and] believes that children learn through interaction with others, including parents, staff and peers in a friendly learning environment.”

– Mr. Farshad Danicek, director of education at
House of Knowledge International Kindergarten

Chinese National Curriculum

The current Chinese educational system is based upon revisions to national education that followed the implementation of The Four Modernizations presented by Zhou Enlai in 1974. These four modernizations – to develop agriculture, industry, technology, and defense – are considered the four goals or pillars of modern education in China.

Famous alumni:

David Brooks (American president of the South Korea and Greater China Division of Coca-Cola), Mika and Charlotte MacInnis (sisters and American hostesses at CCTV and BTV)

Who does it target?

When bilingual or hybrid education programs are available in Beijing, they generally target parents who wish to fully immerse their child in a Chinese-language curriculum in order to understand Chinese culture and emerge from the school system fully literate in Mandarin.

How is it applied?

Divided into a 6-3-3 system (six years of primary school, followed by three years each of junior and senior middle school), the Chinese National Curriculum relies heavily on public funding and the designation of “key school,” which receive greater portions of government funding. These schools are intended to serve the most academically gifted and thus are considered the most prestigious. At the secondary level, “key schools” are like college prep schools in the West. National entrance exams are required for admission to both senior middle school (Western high school level) and university.

Schools in Beijing that administer the Chinese National Curriculum through a bilingual model usually assess a child’s Mandarin language level before placing them in the program. Mandarin language classes are divided into small groups based on ability.

Why should parents consider it?

The single greatest benefit starts with the complete immersion in Mandarin. All subjects are taught in Chinese, thus ensuring your child’s literacy and fluency in the language. Additional benefits include an environment in which Confucian ideological roots provide teachers with palpable respect. Not only do they enjoy un-taxed salaries and a national holiday (Teacher’s Day), but students are expected to, first and foremost, obey their instructions making classrooms much stricter, controlled spaces than in Western schools. If more discipline is needed for your child, a Chinese classroom may be the answer. Furthermore, this system enforces the notion of work ethic, thus resulting in longer school hours and increased amounts of homework. There is the built-in belief that all children can achieve regardless of their background as long as they put in the effort. For example, Beijing 55 boasts that 100 percent of their graduates are accepted into the Chinese university of their choice.

Where is it offered?

Chinese public schools are required by law to accept children of legal foreign residents. Unlike local children, however, foreigners must pay a yearly tuition. The following are examples of local schools that provide bilingual or split systems: Beijing No. 55 High School, Huijia Kindergarten, and Daystar Academy. For a fuller list, see p35.

How well does this education system prepare students for the real world?

There are more than 100 million people learning Mandarin all over the world. Establishing a child’s language and literacy in Mandarin early will provide them with much greater opportunities for a professional future in Asia and internationally. Foreign students who attend bilingual schools are also provided with cultural and social observation classes in order to better understand Chinese national conditions before entering post-secondary schooling in China or the workforce.

Moving Towards Independence

The challenges of transitioning to middle school

by Charlotte Moreau

Anna Fournier is the head of Year 8 and Year 9 at Harrow International School of Beijing

Jennifer Gold not only counsels middle school students at ISB, but she is also the mother of one: Miles (age 11, Grade 6)

If you talk to parents of middle school-aged children, you are likely to hear an exasperated story about how different their child has become after just one year. Some tales are funny while others are frustrating, but they all reveal that middle school can be a tough time. With increased responsibilities at school, issues such as time management, organization, and prioritization are often encountered for the first time. Finding the right balance for success can be challenging for both children and parents. To gain some insight, beijingkids talked to school counselors and parents for their take on the subject.

Ch-Ch-Changes

First and foremost, here's a brief neurological recap: The frontal lobe of the brain, where functions such as planning and self-control set in, is not fully developed until a person reaches their 20s. So, kids in the middle school age bracket are expected to manage extra details in their lives when they simply do not have the full capacity to do so.

Head of Years 8 and 9 at Harrow International School Beijing, Anna Fournier says that parents want to understand why their children go from being loving and caring to sullen and uncommunicative kids who believe that grownups are trying to ruin their life. "[One] thing that [parents] can hang on to is that the part of the brain that empathizes virtually shuts down during the teenage years. Basically, kids become much more selfish. They are not thinking about the effect their actions are having on you; they just care about their role in a situation."

Add hormones to the equation, and it's an all-around difficult time in an adolescent's life. Kids are unfamiliar with all of these changes, which can lead to a lot of stress. It's important for parents to be sensitive during this time of uncertainty and trust that their kids will get through it at their own pace.

Milvia Winters juggles the needs of her four children, who range in age from 9 to 18. "Just when I think I have it all sorted, [the kids] throw a curveball," says Winters. Does gender make a difference? Not in her household. "I think it's personality type that determines ability to organize and prioritize, rather than gender. I have two girls and two boys, and they are all completely different."

Increased Expectations

From elementary to middle school, kids are ushered towards a variety of new opportunities and responsibilities. This is often the stage in school where they move from class to class instead of remaining in one room with one teacher. They have to know what materials are needed and when, and if it's their first experience with lockers, they must organize their belongings and memorize a locker combination. Homework tends to increase during this time, requiring a better handle on daily time management. Depending on the school, there are enrichment or elective courses available, after school activities, and a host of sports teams or clubs to join – each with their own expectations for time and dedication.

Jennifer Gold, a middle school counselor at the International School of Beijing, explains: "At this stage, kids really want some independence from their parents. They want to think on their own and they want some power and control over their lives. And that's age-appropriate. However, it's also at this stage when kids aren't necessarily the best judge of time, how long things will take to do or how long they might need for homework." Parents can help their kids by establishing good routines and habits early on, so that their kids can ultimately do it on their own.

Gold herself is the mother of an 11-year-old. She admits: "I have the same hopes, dreams and fears for my own child as they do with theirs, and I make some of the same mistakes. Even with all of the knowledge and resources I have, I still have to think a lot about the best way to support my son through this stage."

Ingrid Jones has adjusted how she works with her own children to get those good habits in place. Her daughter Avery is in Grade 8 at Beijing City International School, where prioritizing has become increasingly important. Avery does her work independently, only asking for help when she needs it. Ingrid gives her that independence, stepping in if there are signs of struggle or feedback from teachers. With her younger son Ethan, who is in Grade 5, she is more proactive in teaching time management strategies. They created a weekly worksheet that helps Ethan visualize homework and estimate the time needed to complete it. "I have seen the stress of him coming home and saying 'I have so much homework' to feeling confident that he can get it all done if he plans his time. He is very proud of this – as am I for him." It's much harder to backtrack if routines are not set in place early.

As middle school students advance, there will likely be more transition. Gold says that teachers spend a lot of time in early sixth grade helping the students with reminders, teaching skills that help the kids take ownership of their time management. In seventh grade, the social part kicks in a bit more, and teachers often need to rein in the socializing that comes with feeling more comfortable in their position at school. The eighth graders are at the top of their division, hopefully having mastered some of these organizational skills, yet tend to fret more during the second semester about the looming high school years.

Harrow International School Beijing provides daily guidance to students in the form of a personal tutor. Anna Fournier explains: "All students are part of a tutor group (about 10-12 students) who are looked after by a personal tutor monitoring their academic and social progress and needs. The tutors develop an ongoing relationship with their tutees – [meeting every morning and afternoon], rather than just seeing them when they need help."

"When kids move into middle school, it really is a big transition for all, even those who are the most organized," says Gold. "In any transition time, whether it's from one division to another or leaving one country and starting in another, the more quickly people get routines established and in place, the easier it is for kids to regain that solid footing needed to move forward."

Stepping In or Stepping Back?

No parent wishes for his or her kid to fail. "Struggle" is a more accurate word to describe what is sometimes needed to teach kids life skills that will ultimately help them in the future.

Winters has children in elementary school at Dulwich College Beijing and at university. She has watched each of her children mature, sometimes with a struggle. "We need to teach our children to face the consequences of their actions and not always step in and save them. It's a good life lesson for when they grow up." Winters is not there to monitor her oldest, who is away at the University of Cambridge, but she can trust that her daughter has the tools to manage her time independently.

Jones agrees: "Some struggle is really important for kids to learn from, because it teaches resiliency. It's one of the ways that kids learn to bounce back when things don't go their way. You can't really learn that when you've never had things go wrong." She points out, however, that kids need to realize you are not abandoning them. "Make sure they know you're a safe place to 'land' when they fail and that nothing is wrong with failure – it just means you tried something that didn't work or that some help or support is needed."

When work becomes overwhelming and things aren't getting done, it's time to step in. Try to develop a system for better time management, so

Milvia Winters is a mother of four to (clockwise from bottom left) Michela (age 18), Luke (age 12, Year 7), Christopher (age 14, Year 9), and Saskia (age 9, Year 4) – three of whom attend Dulwich College Beijing

Mother to Avery (age 13, Grade 8) and Ethan (age 10, Grade 5), Ingrid Jones believed BCIS to be the best for her children on all fronts, including academics, opportunities, and development there will be some time left for fun. Winter suggests, “A firm set of rules should apply, especially online, as this can take them away from school work, so it needs to be monitored diligently.”

There are simple ways to show your child that setting priorities takes practice. Fournier encourages parents to show kids how you organize yourself. “Tell them that it is hard, that people forget things, but in order to stop this happening, you need to come up with a system that works for you.” Reinforce that they should always try to do their personal best and not compete for the sake of competing. Discourage multitasking too much, as it greatly reduces productivity, and encourage participating in a wide range of activities to keep things in perspective.

Striking a Balance

Parents often wonder if all of the many possibilities for their middle school-aged child are just too much; the kids want to be involved in everything! But middle school is a time for all those extras – exploring new things in a safe environment.

Fournier believes that the extras actually help with time management and the development of multiple skills. “Universities do not just want Grade A students; they want dynamic people who are going to get involved, be part of teams, make things happen and be a positive addition to their institution. Children who get used to doing a range of different activities when they are young are far more likely to be able to manage them as they get older.”

Technology is another addition to the wide spectrum of available tools that many parents did not have themselves during school years. Computers are an essential part of the education process and are not going away, but they can also be a distraction.

Fournier actually encourages the use of apps on mobile devices to help students get organized. “When I suggest this, they often look amazed. Why not? There are brilliant apps available to help everyone organize themselves and this generation is so tech-savvy that they will find it really easy to set up a system that works for them.”

It’s all about balance, says Gold. Kids are exploring other interests, often participating in something that encourages a healthy lifestyle. “It takes some parental help in the beginning, such as ‘Remember that you have soccer tomorrow, so let’s plan ahead on your homework. What do you think?’” Involve your kids in the process, so that they can ultimately take over without much direction.

Factor in Feelings

With all their newfound responsibilities, it’s easy for kids to feel overwhelmed. Gold says that kids might feel like they are always disappointing their parents or teachers – that everyone is frustrated with them. “They get down about that,” she says, “and it’s important to remind them what they are experiencing is normal. There’s nothing wrong with them and they don’t need to feel bad about being overwhelmed.”

Winters, like all parents, wants to see her kids succeed in whatever they choose to do. But she also wants them to realize that school is school, and there is more to life. “We have tried to make them feel that if they want to do well it has to come from within, [along with] of course, support from us. We don’t reward good grades with gifts, as I feel this makes them work for the gift and not because they themselves have the desire to do well.”

Gold reminds us that involving your child – as much as they will allow – is important. “If parents solve everything or dictate all things, you might be setting up a real power struggle that can be very difficult to withdraw from. It’s important to not let those struggles damage your relationship but instead work with your child to solve problems.”

Talking at home is also important, says Fournier. “Think about how you deal with adults – your partner or colleagues at work. If you are picking up vibes that they are not in the best mood, don’t push them; just try again later.”

Family Matters

With many international schools in Beijing and students from a multitude of cultural backgrounds, it is challenging to manage different cultural expectations. Parents who were raised in an environment vastly different from that of their children may not have a frame of reference when dealing with these issues. It can be extra confusing and troubling. Talking to school counselors in situations like these is important, as it’s their job to help both students and parents succeed during this time.

Gold offers this advice to parents, “Your limits are set based on your family's values." Take the resources from school – computers, extra-curricular opportunities, social lives – and apply them with the lens of your family's values.

Winters says: "I do think it's very important to stick to your own family values and not get sucked into what other people are allowing their children to do. I believe when you set boundaries in a way that shows you are concerned with their welfare, they are more likely to accept your guidance. I try to make sure we all take time to reconnect with each other and to keep talking to our children about how they are feeling and to know how they are coping and dealing with issues before they get too big." She also suggest being open to changing the way we parent.

What Can Parents Do?

Adolescents are experiencing changes physically, mentally and emotionally. It's a confusing, yet exciting time for them. Kids at this age need guidance, but want independence, and while it's difficult to parent them at this stage, taking an active role is the most important job yet.

Some tips:

- Sleep is essential, no matter how much they resist resting.
- Connect with your children in regular conversation rather than talking at them (or they will only hear lecturing).
- Take an interest in what they are doing, which ultimately motivates them in many different areas.
- "Catch" them doing something well. It's more frequent than you think!
- Be proactive in helping them through struggles.
- Give them credit – sometimes they are right.
- Acknowledge their individuality.
- Work with your children to set limits that encourage a safe and balanced lifestyle.

We all want to do our best for our kids, but we must also remember that no parent gets it right all the time. Most of all, realize that even if they do try to push you away, your kids still need you and want to know that you are there.

Developing dual-language skills in children

by Ellis Friedman

In a world in which multilingualism is a prized skill, children living in Beijing are in a prime position to become proficient in one or both of the necessary languages of the future: Mandarin and English. The boom in bilingual programs in Beijing is a response to the demand for bilingual education. But raising a bilingual child is not as simple as throwing him or her into a classroom for a daily dose of Mandarin. Raising a bilingual child takes patience, effort, and structure. Luckily, there are a myriad of schools and support systems in Beijing that support dual languages.

The Perks of Multilingualism

The most obvious benefit of multilingualism is the prospect of future opportunities in either language. There is plenty of research that shows there are numerous cognitive benefits to being raised in a bilingual environment, and cognitive flexibility is one of them. Cognitive flexibility is the ability to mentally switch between two ideas, or think about multiple things simultaneously, and bilinguals outperform their monolingual peers in these tasks. James Helbringer, the assistant principal at Beijing International Bilingual Academy (BIBA), explains, "Bilingual children are able to use both sides of their brains, so they're able to think simultaneously in different languages."

Additionally, studies have shown that bilingual children exhibit greater executive control throughout childhood and adulthood. Such functions include focusing attention, self-control, and strategizing.

Because bilingual brains are adept at switching languages, they are more adept at switching tasks, learning additional languages, and efficiently processing information. The benefits extend throughout life, from early childhood brain development, and potentially even into older age, as bilingual brains are able to better stave off age-related cognitive decline.

What's Right for Your Child?

Parents considering a bilingual program for their child should step back and consider their plans and goals. "Know what your expectation is going into a [bilingual or] dual immersion program," says Amy Loveday Hu, principal at 3e International School, which offers a dual immersion program. "If you've got a long-term goal of maintaining both the languages, then it's a good choice," says Loveday Hu, but she cautions that for families planning under two or three years of exposure to either or both of the languages, a bilingual or dual immersion setting may not be the ideal situation. "It is quite stressful for children if they come in not understanding [one of the languages], and they're not going to maintain fluency if they're only here for one or two years. Then they've experienced a lot of stress that is possibly needless."

Another factor to consider is the age of your child. "The earlier, the better," says Helbringer. Virtually all educators agree that the younger a child is, the easier it is for him to grasp new languages. Once a child is about 6 years old, or just after kindergarten, it gets harder to place him in a bilingual program. Helbringer explains: "[The older the child gets,] the more complicated the material gets, so if you're trying to understand the language and grasp the concept, it's difficult."

Earlier might better, but it's important to remember that it's different for every child. Kristin Damberger, BIBA's curriculum coordinator, clarifies: "It depends a lot on the student's work ethic and level of knowledge in their first language. With older students, it takes a lot more effort and personal drive to acquire a second language, whereas with younger kids it just happens naturally."

But is it ever too late to place your child in a bilingual program? "It depends on what you want," says Helbringer. "If you want a child [who has a low level of English] to get into an English-speaking university and you enter a bilingual program in tenth grade, it would be too late. It's hard even in third or fourth grade to come in with no English; it's going to take a couple of years in English as a Second Language to get into the regular class." Ideally, he suggests starting a child in a bilingual program before second grade.

"Studies have shown that bilingual children exhibit greater executive control throughout childhood and adulthood"

What to Look For

Paula Phipps, primary coordinator at Yew Chung International School of Beijing (YCIS Beijing), encourages parents looking at bilingual programs to examine the feel and atmosphere of the potential school. "The child needs to feel comfortable," she urges, and the parent should make sure that all the teachers are certified. Robyn Hamilton, also a primary coordinator at YCIS Beijing, stresses looking at "how much time is spent on each language. I just don't think that you can easily learn [a second language] from an hour a day." It's also important to find a school that emphasizes the cultural components of the teaching languages.

Also, look at where the standards for the Chinese section of the curriculum are coming from, and make sure it's a legitimate source.

Parents should also check that the school is accredited or in the process of being accredited. For instance, YCIS lists five accreditations on their website including the Council for International Schools (CIS) and the New England Association of Schools and Colleges (NEASC); and BIBA is in the process of obtaining its Western Association of Schools and Colleges (WASC) accreditation.

Bilingual Programs

Scores of Beijing schools bill themselves as "bilingual," but it doesn't mean the program is actually bilingual. There are a number of permutations of ways to teach a bilingual curriculum, and though BIBA, YCIA, and 3e all have different structures, all of their programs foster bilingual students.

At both YCIS Beijing and BIBA, 50 percent of class time is spent in English, while the other half is spent in Chinese. After kindergarten and until about age 12, at both schools, the split becomes 70 percent

English and 30 percent Chinese. At BIBA, Grades 1 through 5 have an English homeroom teacher who co-teaches math with a Chinese math teacher, and each class also has a Chinese language arts teacher. BIBA uses the Chinese National Curriculum to teach math, and a curriculum based on the California Common Core Standards for other subjects.

YCIS Beijing has a co-teaching program, which means that the classrooms have one Chinese teacher and one English teacher with the 50-50 split in kindergarten and 10 co-taught periods in primary grades thereafter. The co-teachers are equal – both are certified teachers, and they both share the running of the classroom and the lesson planning. YCIS Beijing uses its own curriculum in addition to the IB curriculum, and being bilingual is crucial to their identity. Hamilton explains: “We firmly believe that English and Chinese are two of the most important languages in the world. [Being bilingual] allows students to move freely between cultures.”

3e International School implements a dual immersion program. Students from kindergarten until Grade 4 get a 50-50 split of English and Chinese every day, with children spending half the day in the English classroom with two English teachers, and the other half of the day in the Chinese classroom with two Chinese teachers. Nursery is the only exception; in that age group, each classroom has one English teacher and one Chinese teacher at all times. Loveday Hu explains 3e’s curriculum is one that “explores a lot of existing curriculums. It’s more American, but it’s called DAP, Developmentally Appropriate Practice.” The curriculum is research-based and subject to review every two years by a curriculum committee made up of parents, teachers, and administrators. “What we’re really focusing on is English and Chinese, the two cultures, and building the social and emotional skills for children,” says Loveday Hu.

Once the decision is made to place a child in a bilingual or dual immersion program, the hard part is just beginning. Especially if either of the parents do not speak one or both of the school’s teaching languages, it can be hard to know if a child is thriving or struggling. What’s a parent to do?

“Don’t expect your child to be completely fluent and join the United Nations within six months,” cautions Loveday Hu. Learning a language takes time, and it’s crucial not to pressure or overwork a child. “When children first start a bilingual program, they will be tired,” Hamilton cautions. “Don’t sign them up for loads of clubs. Don’t pressure them to do two hours of piano or hire a tutor because you’re worried they need to catch up. Learning in two languages all day is tiring, so we suggest that students go to bed a bit earlier for the first couple of months. Parents need to acknowledge that it’s hard work.”

Helbringer adds: “The biggest thing is being supportive and not pushing it, because it takes time.” Be there for your child, and spend as much time with them as possible. Reading in your home language is an excellent way to be supportive while encouraging kids to develop language skills. “Having confidence in the language at home helps with new languages, because if you don’t have confidence at home, it makes everything else difficult,” advises Loveday Hu.

If each parent has a different mother tongue, the best practice is to have each parent only speak in that language to the child. For example, if Mom speaks Chinese and Dad speaks English, Mom only speaks in Chinese and Dad only speaks in English. This helps kids compartmentalize, and can give added reinforcement. If Mom and Dad have the same native language, it's a good idea to set the example of language learning for your kids. If you don't speak Chinese and your child is learning it, it's okay to try to speak some Chinese to them and acknowledge that learning another language is hard. But if they don't want to speak Chinese in a home where English is the language, don't push it. Children associate people and places with particular languages, and children may resist speaking a language at home that isn't usually spoken there.

To keep tabs on progress, parents should be attentive when their children are doing their homework. Damberger points out that teachers should be assigning homework that students can complete independently. If you notice that your child is having problems completing work on his own, don't be alarmed; instead, communicate with the teacher. Teachers at YCIS Beijing, 3e, and BIBA keep careful tabs on their students, and if there's an issue, the teacher will reach out to the parent, or address the parent's concerns. Then, listen to what the teachers tell you. "What you see at home is a tiny fraction of what is actually going on," says Loveday Hu. "Good teachers will always be very honest with parents and will never pretend something is fine when it's not."

Bilingual Development

A persistent worry among parents is that if their children are in a bilingual environment, their development will be slower than that of their peers. However, research refers to this mindset as the "myth of the monolingual brain." Actual findings show that language acquisition in early childhood develops largely at the same rate in bilingual children as in monolingual children. While early speech development may lag slightly in bilinguals, it isn't permanent, and is considered inconsequential to the ultimate acquisition of phonological skills.

It is fairly common for children in a bilingual program to go through a silent phase in the first year or so. This is normal, Hamilton says, as the child is probably a bit overwhelmed and is just listening. There are a number of reasons for the silence. First, your child is building his receptive language, as he can't express himself until he does so. He's also training his mouth muscles for the sounds of a new language, and maybe he's also trying to internalize the routine of his new school. The length of a silent period varies by child and language exposure, and while its length is generally between two and six months, it can last up to a year.

Also don't become alarmed if your child starts a sentence, thought, or conversation in one language and finishes it in another. This is called code switching, and it's normal. In fact, it's probably a good indicator that your child is absorbing both languages and thinking in both of them. Children will generally start code switching after one or two years in a bilingual or dual immersion environment.

It's easy for parents to feel helpless when their child is in a bilingual program, especially if the parent doesn't speak one of the classroom languages. One of the best things parents can do in this case is to arrange play dates with their peers. This will help them build a social language and help them learn the idioms and slang that will make them sound like a native speaker.

When parents want to know how long it will take for their child to become bilingual, many educators are reluctant to nail down a number, because there is no single exemplary amount of time across the board. Factors to take into account include the age the child entered the bilingual program, the amount of time spent on each language, independent motivation, what languages are spoken at home, and of course, the different learning speeds and styles of each child. Applying a bilingual multicultural philosophy to early education

3e International School began in 2005 and has grown into an institution of 201 students from Nursery to Grade 4. The school aims to develop “critical thinkers and passionate learners who move confidently and fluidly across cultures,” through a research-based curriculum developed especially for this education model. Classes are conducted in English and Chinese with half of every day devoted to each language. Within this inquiry based program, a balance of child-initiated and teacher-directed activity is provided to support children’s development across the entire curriculum.

"Beanstalk's door is always open to parents. I was looking for a school that could help Leo develop an international outlook; I wanted him to be a global citizen regardless of where he lives. After two and a half years at Beanstalk, when I look at my son I know I've made the right decision. There seem to be no boundaries when he thinks and asks questions. His teacher makes each child feel special, which in turn helps the children show the same kind of caring for others."

Beijing 21st Century Experimental Kindergarten

二十一世纪幼儿园国际园

A model kindergarten with an international department

Founded by Siwa Group in 1995, Beijing 21st Century Experimental Kindergarten is the only municipal-level, private model kindergarten and early childhood education center in Beijing. With a total investment of more than RMB 100 million in the kindergarten program, Beijing 21st Century now has 18 branches and more than 5,000 students in Beijing. All the foreign teachers recruited at the kindergarten's international department are qualified teachers in their home countries; experienced Chinese teachers discuss and present courses in tandem with their expat counterparts. The school helps students develop independence, social skills, courage, and teamwork through experience-based learning, weekly topics, international courses, Chinese culture courses, sports, and arts.

Word from a parent:

Word from a parent:

"BCIS has so many great things going for it, it's hard to know where to start. Firstly, teachers take the time to find out about each child and how they learn best, and then teach accordingly. My children are learning the value of trying out new things, taking risks, and thinking creatively and critically. The size of the school is just right: not so big that it feels impersonal, but big enough with a wide range of opportunities. The school also provides plenty of opportunities for the broader BCIS community to come together, such as music, drama and sporting events, and a swimming pool open to the school community. Whenever anyone asks my children about BCIS, they are really enthusiastic; I don't think you can ask for greater praise than that."

Word from a parent:

"When we came to China in 2011, we were determined that our children should come away from here with a broad exposure to local culture and language. We also wanted them to have a solid international and transferable education. We looked for a school that offered a balance of exposure to local culture and language, without the very high costs of international schooling. We have one child in BIBA's kindergarten and one in elementary school. Both kids love going to school - they get involved in everything that is going on and we are delighted with the progress that they are making in Chinese. At BIBA, they really do have the best of both Western and Chinese worlds."

"Our daughter Tong Tong has spent one and a half years at Jiade Montessori Bilingual Kindergarten. She is a lucky girl and we are lucky parents. At Jiade Montessori, she is completely embraced by the Montessori education system within which she grows confidently, freely and happily. Through various seminars and classroom observation opportunities, the school has made efforts to extend Montessori education to parents, answering many of our questions. We have been growing together with our daughter, discovering unlimited happiness, and we would like to say, thank you, Jiade Montessori."

"Watching Wang Xinyi grow up happy and healthy at Beijing New Talent Academy for the past two years, I cannot help but thank her teachers. Seeing how she is now, I can almost picture her in primary school, secondary school, or even her work, marriage and children. She will not necessarily be so successful at that time, but she will certainly not lack passion and creativity. And perhaps she will not be so wealthy, but she will love life and have the courage to pursue her own happiness. As long as she perseveres, she will eventually harvest her own patch of sky. I believe the school's educational goal will be passed along from generation to generation. Maybe China's next president will come out of Beijing New Talent Academy in the next 20, 30 or 50 years."

Word from a parent:

"What is a good school? What is a good teacher? Beijing No. 4 High School provides the answer to these questions. A good teacher is a child's role model and brings light into that child's life. In Japanese, we often say: 'A good teacher can make a child; a bad teacher can destroy a child's life.' This is especially true of the adolescent stage, when the impact of teachers and classmates are bigger than that of parents.' Though I've only come in contact a few times with the young teachers at No. 4, they have already impressed me."

Beijing No. 25 Middle School

北京市第二十五中学

A Canadian curriculum for middle school students in Beijing

Originally named Yu Ying School, Beijing No. 25 Middle School was founded by the American Congregational Church in 1864, making it the first school to both introduce and develop Western science and modern education in recent educational history in Beijing. It was named by the Beijing Education Commission as the "Experimental High School for Featured Development." The Canadian-certified high school program at Beijing No. 25 Middle School was founded in 2005 as one of the earliest establishments approved by the Beijing Municipality. The Canadian curriculum is delivered entirely in English by Canadian-certified teachers. Graduates receive dual diplomas issued by both countries and can choose to enter universities in Canada, the US, or other English-speaking countries. Of note, they also have sister-school relationships with middle schools in Sweden, Korea, Canada, Germany and Japan.

Word from a parent:

"I want to thank the teachers for their efforts in teaching and caring for the students. My child has grown into a capable, responsible, healthy student. Recently, he took part in a winter camp in Canada, where he lived with a local family for a month, studied marketing and received excellent marks. My child isn't outstanding in exams, but he is open, optimistic, kind-hearted and has a wide range of interests. I believe that the school's teaching concept benefits him, because they value the individualized development of students. After careful consideration, we finally decided on sending him to study the Canadian certified high school program at No. 25 Middle School. And now, my child is growing up in an open environment and he is happy. We feel gratitude to the schools and teachers that our child progresses every day."

Beijing No. 55 High School

北京市第五十五中学

Beijing No. 55 High School is a city-level key school. Upon approval of the Beijing Municipal Government, the school began recruiting foreign students in 1975. The International Students Section of Beijing No. 55 High School was established in 1989. After being evaluated by the International Baccalaureate Organization, No. 55 became the first Chinese member of the IBO in September of 1994. To date, more than 3,000 foreign students from 70 countries have studied at the school. Over the last 10 years and more, No. 55's teachers have formed a unique education system based on Chinese language learning. The International Students Section offers a wide variety of compulsory and elective subjects, as well as extracurricular activities and a student council. Students from the International Department have achieved excellent results in the Chinese Proficiency Test (HSK), and been admitted to many universities in and out of China. No. 55 is committed to fostering world citizens who can actively participate in local and international affairs to meet the demands of the 21st century.

Word from a parent:

"Teachers are really responsible, conscientious and warm-hearted [at No. 55]. They take a good care of the children, who in turn think of the teachers as their parents. We are satisfied with the progress of our child in Chinese. Teachers relay honestly to parents the challenges that students face in every aspect and analyze their progress in detail. They pass on knowledge as well as life lessons, helping the kids develop in a well-rounded way."

Word from a parent:

"When my family moved to Beijing a year ago, on the top of our agenda was finding a good kindergarten for our two toddlers. What struck us the most about Sunny High-Scope was the warmth and personal touch that we experienced from the moment we walked through the door. The principal walked us through every floor of the school, explained how each room was divided, what science class was to a 3- or 4-year-old, even right down to the type of crayons and paints that the children would be using. The school has been great in managing our expectations as parents, and been kind to let us know to 'relax' when needed, while at the same time openly accepting our feedback. The kids love school and have a fantastic outlet for arts and sports. We are extremely happy with our choice."

Word from a parent:

"We have been pleased with the academic and extracurricular opportunities the school has given David. The IB curriculum is rigorous and prepares David well to enter the American university of his choice. The teachers know their subjects well and use the ManageBac technology to communicate with the students and parents. The Model UN program has provided opportunities to learn about public diplomacy in the weekly meetings and in two trips to conventions in Singapore. As a basketball team captain David has benefited from the coach's team-building spirit and the camaraderie of a team working hard to establish a new team and a new league. BWYA provides a very well-rounded high school experience."

Bella Growth International Kids House

北京贝拉成长国际幼儿之家

Where young minds are guided, not instructed

Bella Growth provides early childhood education and development inspired by the Reggio Emilia approach, an Italian preschool model. Bella combines this approach with an American (ESL) preschool phonics curriculum and the best parts of traditional Chinese teaching and learning theories. With parental involvement and community support, students learn by moving, touching, listening, and seeing. Students are encouraged to express themselves and depict their understanding of the world through hundreds of symbolic languages that include drawing, singing, drama, sports, reading and writing. Children here are guided, rather than instructed, by their teacher, so they will become confident, respectful, creative, and responsible individuals.

Word from a parent:

"BSB has been the perfect school for our son over the past three years. Dedicated teachers and rigorous academics, with a strong emphasis on character and integrity, has launched John's career as a curious scholar and global citizen. The school's ability to differentiate the curriculum in all subjects is unparalleled. Access to teachers and administrators allowed any concerns we had to be immediately addressed over the years. While we are happy to be returning to our home country, we will miss our BSB family and can only hope we find a school as wonderful as BSB back home."

The Children's House International Montessori Kindergarten

巧智博仁国际幼儿园

Providing a home away from home under the Montessori system

Word from a parent:

"I have three children who attended The Children's House during their preschool years. When looking for a kindergarten, I wanted a place that was warm, safe, and caring. I was impressed by the atmosphere at Children's House, where children's artwork adorns the walls and there is color and activity in all of the classrooms. I'm always impressed by how passionate the teachers are about Montessori training methods and how well they know each of my children. The teachers are supported by great administrative staff and a wonderful principal. I have loved watching my children develop self-confidence and independence through their experiences at the school."

— Meaghan Amor (Australia), mother of George (age 7), Oliver (age 5), and Indigo (age 2)

Providing a home away from home under the Montessori system, The Children's House opened its China World Trade Center campus in 1992 and has since established schools at the Lufthansa Center, Yosemite Villas in Shunyi and in Yayuncun's Yayunxin Garden. Today, the educational group serves over 300 international students in its four campuses, which are characterized by their small, friendly down-home atmospheres, English-only and bilingual curriculums that adhere to the world-renowned Montessori system.

Children's International Bilingual Academy (CIBA)

Instilling courage, curiosity, and creativity

Founded in 2002, the Children's International Bilingual Academy (CIBA), formerly known as Children's Learning Center of Beijing, has served the local Chinese and expatriate community in Shunyi for over a decade. The CIBA method is designed to instill courage, curiosity, and creativity in every child and inspire them into a life-long love of learning. CIBA uses an integrated international curriculum based on American and British national standards. Both "Head Start Child and Development and Early Learning Framework" and "Early Years Foundation Stage" (EYFS) guide the planning, implementation, and reflection of learning programs. Together, they provide the principles, practices, and outcomes essential to support and enhance learning, as well as children's transition to school. Both frameworks have a strong emphasis on play-based learning. The frameworks also recognize the importance of communication and language, including early literacy and numeracy, and social and emotional development.

Word from a parent:

"The minute you enter the school, you feel welcome. I believe that a nurturing environment is vital for any child's development. Dulwich exceeded my expectations. I wanted to continue a British-based education for my children and wanted international teachers, however with a solid British leadership - this I found at Dulwich. The school offers strong academics, sound teachers who care and this is further evident in the regular teacher/parent communications. Authentic Britishness with a bit of eccentricity, sports fields and theatre facilities which are hard to beat, and an attitude of keep calm and carry on doing your best."

Etonkids International Kindergarten

伊顿国际幼儿园

An American-style Montessori education in the heart of the CBD

CBD Global Trade Mansion Etonkids International Kindergarten is one of the oldest schools in Beijing's Etonkids franchise, a nationwide educational group. The Lido Kindergarten campus was built in 1987 and underwent major renovations when it became Etonkids International School in 2003. The school provides a community-centered American-style education led by Montessori-certified teachers and an educational philosophy based on the Three C's: Creativity, Character and Culture. Coursework includes lessons in practical life, "sensorial" math, language, culture and science. The staff meets regularly for training under the EXCELS school improvement planning program, which is designed to share new teaching practices, the Montessori method, and current educational trends.

Word from a parent:

"My daughter's teacher always stressed to me the importance of allowing my daughter make her own choices. I decided to put this to the test at home, and from my experience, I can only concur wholeheartedly with this idea. Whenever we encountered a task she didn't like, or didn't want to do, instead of questioning or pushing her into it, I would give my daughter the time and opportunity to make a choice. I would often lead her by offering choices. I found this method to work wonderfully around 90 percent of the time because it shows respect for the child and confidence in her ability to make decisions.

"The first time I took my kids to Fangcaodi, I saw a friendly Western teacher standing on the playground surrounded by a group of students. They were laughing and joking in English. I went to talk to him and learned his name was Mr. B. I sent many questions to him regarding the school, and he always replied promptly. He was so patient and willing to help. We are so lucky that Katherine became Mr. B's student. He devotes his time and effort to teaching and helps his students build lifelong reading habits. Katherine has learned a lot and finds it so much fun to be in Mr. B's class. It's no surprise that many kids voted Mr. B for 'Best Teacher,' considering his kindness, caring, helpfulness, humor, devotion, and excellence in teaching."

"Our son Richard joined House of Knowledge in September 2012. At the beginning, he could not communicate; he could only speak a few words in Chinese and none at all in English. The staff at HoK did everything they could to help Richard. As often as possible, there was a German speaker in the group; the fact that somebody understood him helped Richard a lot. Now, he enjoys being there and has even started to speak English. Richard's integration into the kindergarten was due to successful teamwork between himself, the very engaged HoK staff, and us (the parents).

International School of Beijing (ISB)

北京顺义国际学校

From a tiny embassy school to a multinational learning center

Word from a parent:

"Before we moved here from Boston, we had already heard so many great things about ISB from the expatriate community. Not only is ISB a school with high academic standards, it is also enriched with a wide range of extracurricular activities. Children here are encouraged to pursue their passions and dreams. Our daughter, being very shy, was still anxious about leaving her friends and moving to a new school. The transition turned out to be very smooth because all her teachers were very caring. She was warmly welcomed into the school and bonded with new friends quickly. Now, she is an active member of the ISB community, enjoying the academic challenge at school while participating in various charity works, different clubs and varsity sports. When transitioning into high school, she decided not to go to the US to boarding school. She wants to be a proud graduate of ISB."

— Jenny Ye (US), mother of Kaylee (Grade 9)

The oldest international school in Beijing, ISB is an independent, co-educational college-preparatory day school offering an international curriculum for the children of expatriate families. Building on its 33-year tradition of academic excellence, ISB embraces the challenges and rewards of the future of education. Through a tailored, connected, real-world curriculum known as Learning21@ISB, experienced and passionate teachers provide students with exceptional opportunities to grow as individuals, as scholars, and as contributing members of the community. For high school students, ISB offers a US-accredited college preparatory program; full IB Diploma or IB Certificate options for students in grades 11 and 12, as well as AP courses in Calculus AB/BC and Chinese.

Keystone Academy

北京鼎石国际学校

Keystone Academy will open in Shunyi District in the fall of 2014. Keystone promises to be a unique and exciting school option for families in China – offering Chinese and American instructional techniques of inquiry-based learning, critical-thinking, and creative problem solving in a rigorous intellectual environment. The academic program will be international in scope, with a central curriculum thread that focuses on Chinese identity, language, culture, and history. Keystone will serve students grades 1 through 12, with a bilingual curriculum in the primary years and more intensive instruction in English as students progress through the program. There will be a boarding school option for Grade 7 and 8, and mandatory boarding in Grade 9-12.

Word from a parent:

"My children are Chinese American and are bilingual and bicultural. My husband and I have researched 30+ elementary schools in Beijing and to be honest, we are having trouble finding a school that is academically rigorous, emphasizes both Chinese and English, and uses a teaching methodology that develops the whole child. I was very excited to read about Keystone Academy and the educational diversity it can bring to China, especially Beijing."

The Learning Center (TLC)

A professional tutoring service for international and local students

The Learning Center is an American-operated tutoring center, which has been addressing the learning needs of international and local students in Beijing since 2004. TLC was founded by Jennifer Sachs, an American teacher with over 20 years of experience in China. She and her team of qualified, native English-speaking educators run one-on-one and small group classes in all key subject areas – including advanced English, science, math, humanities, and ESOL. TLC's expertise includes SSAT, SAT, IB, IGCSE, and university entrance preparation. After almost a decade in this field, TLC knows the challenges that students face when it comes to entering and thriving in an international school setting. The center works directly with schools to better understand what they expect from students, including the unique skills, knowledge, and attitudes that bring academic success in a Western learning environment. TLC also monitors students' progress and communicates regularly with their families to ensure that they are prepared for the challenges ahead.

Word from a parent:

"I chose LVMS for the proximity to our home, the nice environment, and the Montessori philosophy. I am enchanted with the progress my child has made in the Casa community, and delighted by the relationship my husband and I have developed with the team. My child never wants to go home and presses me to go to school in the morning; this is more than I could hope for! LVMS implements monthly parent conferences, during which I have learned a lot about education. It is also a fantastic platform to get to know other parents better and share our experiences. I am very happy with the choice I have made for my son and – more importantly – he is very happy with that choice."

After school activities: Parties, lectures, and more

Extra help offered: MIA encourages parents

Word from a parent:

"Qiaoqiao has been attending [MIA] since she was 11 months old. Gradually, I have found that she has become more and more focused. She is a fan of music; she really likes blues and jazz – and dancing. As for her character, she is not capricious, but very quiet, seldom cries, and is quite reasonable. This is due in part to her teachers' patience, and we, as parents, also learned something from it. Thank you to the teachers for keeping our babies happy, confident, and healthy!"

School facilities: Multipurpose classrooms, a cafeteria, an indoor gym, a library, a music room

Word from a parent:

"Cici has been attending Muffy's Xiangshan branch for half a year. At the beginning, we chose Muffy's because it was close to our home. I've come to realize that it's a kindergarten that encourages the growth of children. Muffy's teachers are kind, loving, have perfect English pronunciation and the class sizes are small. The children learn to recognize shapes and colors, and gain the ability to express their feelings in English. I am very satisfied that Cici attends a kindergarten that provides her with a happy environment. When Cici is away from school, she always complains about missing her teachers. She really loves Muffy's!

"From what I saw in the first three days of accompanying Benji to school, the teachers gave the kids a chance to express themselves. During story time, they encouraged the children to share their ideas. We were also very impressed when we learned of a parent who complained about a teacher's attitude to the school and immediate action was taken to address the situation. My husband and I appreciate New Garden's daily reports; teachers take parents seriously when it comes to taking note of the child's attitude and emotions. Word from a parent:

"The first time I visited PFS with my daughter, she was 2 years and 4 months. She is smart but shy. The school is in a villa, giving it a feeling of familiarity, like a home. We arrived during free activity; it was quiet. The kids sat on the floor by twos and threes to work, while the teacher told a story to whoever wanted to listen. Looking around the whole room, I didn't find any desks or chairs. All the toys were placed on the shelves. We were invited to join in on music time. The kids and teachers sat on the floor in a circle – listening to music, they danced and clapped hands. It was like a party rather than a class. After that experience, I decided to send my daughter to PFS. PFS will have a bright future, without a doubt."

An enriching learning center in Beijing's villa community

Prestige Education Centre (PEC) is a newly-opened school at the heart of the villa community in Beijing. Its curriculum is based on the Independent English School system and teaches children about the world around them in small, personalized classes. Currently, PEC's headmaster and the majority of its teachers are from the UK, and the rest are from the US. The school's mix of children from local schools and international schools gives students a culturally rich experience that comes together in a 100 percent English environment. PEC offers the highest standards as it caters to students who would like to study abroad, study in an international school in the future, or who would like to enrich their learning in general. PEC's weekend classes run for one day or two days, half days, or whole-day sessions. A well-rounded UK education is provided, which includes math, English, geography, science, history, music, art, drama, and design, as well as specific topic-based activities for younger learners. By making weekend study fun, PEC aims to help individuals to achieve their academic potential.

Russian Children's Education Center (RCEC)

A preschool, kindergarten, and grade school with a Russian/English bilingual curriculum

The motto of the Russian Children's Education Center is "To know, to feel, to do," signifying a commitment to hands-on learning. The Russian-centered program seeks to nurture children's cognitive activity, curiosity, and desire for self-knowledge while stimulating their imagination and developing creativity, speech, and intellectual abilities. The school focuses on increasing children's self-awareness and establishing an environment of emotional support. Learning materials feature the super popular animal characters from the Russian animation Smeshariki, also known in China as Kaixinqiu (开心球).

Founding Date: January 2011

School facilities: Brand new campus with nearby park, spacious classrooms with large work areas, big bright windows for natural light, and children's furniture. Classrooms are tailored to meet the developmental needs of each age group.

Word from a parent:

"[RCEC] stands out from other preschools in the city with its warm, bright, joyful, and almost magical atmosphere. Everything here – from the interior decoration to teachers' attitudes, administration, and technical staff – shows that everything is done with great love for the children. The kids are offered many different classes, like choreography, drawing, art, singing, swimming, foreign languages, and more. There's something for everyone. Most importantly, the center provides Russian traditions, literature, and folklore for those who do not want their children to lose sight of their rich cultural heritage."

Side by Side

Providing special education, support, and therapy for all ages

Word from a parent:

"Side by Side was our 'cloud with the silver lining.' It is hard to believe that there is such a treasure of academic, social and emotional support right here in Shunyi. Side by Side is everything a parent could look for in a school. Whether a child needs an extra hand in understanding academic content, practice in life-long skills, and/or emotional, social, or behavioral support, Side by Side provided our child with just the right balance. Her peaceful, calm, and positive attitude was a blessing to come home to."

– Tifani Sadek (US), parent of Taylor (age 8)

Side by Side is a foreign-owned and foreign-managed center for individuals with special needs and learning difficulties. The center works with all ages, from preschool to adult, as well as families, schools, and community groups. Saint Paul American School (SPAS)

北京师范大学第二附属中学

An American-style high school education in the heart of Beijing

Word from a parent:

"It was a long way to go for a birthday party, but it was my son's 15th birthday and I was going to be there. So from our home in Vail, Colorado, I was standing at the SPAS gate 23 hours later. SPAS was so welcoming. I ate lunch with the students in the cafeteria, hung out in his dorm room, and even took the bus with some of the students to attend church service. I felt like I was part of the SPAS family. Back home in the US, we were missing him terribly, especially his mother Xin (who was raised in Beijing), but I knew I could report back that Johnny was doing fine; not just fine, but extremely fine. He had good friends, supportive teachers and staff and good facilities. As parents, we chose this high school, so that he could learn Chinese language, appreciate other cultures, and not compromise academics. While we had concerns regarding our objectives and our son's ability to adjust, we now know we didn't need to worry."

— Bob Barron (US), parent of John Barron (age 14, Grade 9)

Saint Paul American School (SPAS) is a private residential school, part of the Nacel International School System, dedicated to meeting the educational needs of international students at the middle and high school level. Partnered with the No. 2 High School attached to Beijing Normal University, SPAS offers both an American curriculum, as well as intensive study in Chinese language and culture. This arrangement provides a unique dual diploma system that is fully accredited by the North Central Association on Accreditation and School Improvement (NCA). Saint Paul American School's intercultural program now serves students from 23 countries around the world, and is truly dedicated to providing a new concept of high school for future leaders in the global community.

Western Academy of Beijing: The Story of a Dream

The world-class school that is the Western Academy of Beijing was founded in 1994 with a strong sense of purpose. The "Story of a Dream" tells of the values and dedication that propelled the creation of WAB and that continue to inspire. "In any close-knit community stories are shared so that all know of the roads traveled together, the paths chosen, and the reasons for the journey itself. WAB is just such a community, thus the desire and need to tell our story." - Sabina Brady, one of WAB's founders.

Why WAB?

Back in the early 90's, a group of parents in Beijing believed that a new school could fulfill a pressing need - that of providing greater educational choice in China's capital city. The dream was to create something different: a non-profit, independent international school for foreign children in Beijing, guided by a parent board - a school that embraced Chinese language and culture, had a truly international curriculum, and most critically, accomplished all of that within a child-centered and inquiry-based learning environment. "Our students exemplify these values through their awareness of the world around them, service to others, can-do spirit and commitment to excellence," says WAB Director Geoffrey Andrews.

Brady continues, "The WAB dream was of a school that celebrated the joy of learning - a place where all could realize their own personal levels of excellence and light candles instead of merely complaining of the darkness; a place where all would be equipped to go out into the world confident of themselves and of their power and responsibility to light candles for others. This was, and continues to be, WAB's vision."

WAB first opened its doors in 1994 to just 146 students, and now WAB brings together over 1500 students from more than 50 different nationalities. A place of engaged, innovative learning opportunities, WAB's campus features impressively beautiful grounds and facilities, which reflect 'jing shen' - a spirit of being welcoming, friendly, vibrant and creative. WAB's Early Childhood Center, Elementary School, Middle School and High School provide self-contained environments for the different age groups, with the HUB Sports, Arts and Technology Center as a shared resource for Middle and High School students.

The Western Academy of Beijing is a top tier international school, well known in Asia and around the world, with international educators, staff and students eager to join the extraordinary WAB learning community. Year after year, WAB students are admitted to top universities and colleges, and WAB is proud to have graduated several students with perfect scores on the IB exams - two in 2012 alone.

Opportunities for learning beyond the classroom are constantly being embraced and developed at WAB. The recent addition of the Miao Liang Environmental Education Center, situated close to Beijing in the Miyun mountains, offers WAB students extended environmental science, geography and outward bound programs. WAB's wetlands, developed in partnership with the Jane Goodall Institute and with the corporate support of Bayer, is another example of an environmental initiative, offering students educational opportunities in line with WAB's Mission and Core Values.

Today, just as in the beginning, both on and off campus, WAB offers a challenging and caring, community-based educational environment in which students, staff and parents cooperate in the educational process. A world-class school that is proud of its accomplishments and sure of its future, WAB remains committed to its continued development as a model school educating the world's future leaders.

Looking forward, founder Sabina Brady's words continue to ring true:

"We believe WAB will continue to grow and flourish as long as we ensure that [our] expectations stretch beyond the imaginings of any one single individual and as long as we keep dreaming our dreams together." To find out more about WAB, visit www.wab.edu, or call 5986 5588.

Windsor Bilingual Kindergarten

温莎双语幼儿园

A global education combining the best of East and West

Windsor Bilingual Kindergartens hold true to one very simple philosophy: children come first. The school's expertly-trained teachers deliver a unique, tailor-made curriculum that combines the strongest elements and values of educational theory from the UK with a traditional Chinese education. Windsor treats all children as individuals and caters specifically to their emotional, cognitive, and physical growth – recognizing that these factors are interrelated and essential to creating a whole child. Married with Windsor's multicultural environment, this allows the schools to nurture learners who are self-motivated and ready for the multinational world in which they will play active roles. Windsor's state-of-the-art facilities are purpose-built with fun and safety in mind, catering to all from the most rambunctious of individuals to the most serene.

Word from a parent:

"Both of my daughters are studying at Windsor. The reason my husband and I chose Windsor is that we hoped our daughters could receive an international-standard education starting from their childhood. The ideal kindergarten for us would provide a high-quality and continual educational environment that fits our daughters best, where they can learn from exploring and being happy. Windsor Bilingual Kindergarten makes me feel like I am still in Australia; the atmosphere is easy and happy, and the staff here are really hospitable. The only difference between Australia and Windsor is that the latter provides a bilingual educational environment, in which my two daughters have the best opportunity to study two languages."

Word from a parent:

"After Shangshang transferred from another school to Yew Wah's K4 class, we saw striking changes. When we go outside now, he tells us: 'Drive less, we need to protect our environment. We only have one world.' He started caring about the environment and asked adults to do the same. Yew Wah totally went beyond our expectations. We are thankful for all the teachers' hard work and hope Yew Wah has a good future."

Young Starters Academy (YSA)

A bilingual kindergarten with a holistic approach to early childhood education

Young Starters Academy (formerly known as Beijing2Fun) is a bilingual kindergarten that takes a holistic approach to young children's education. The curriculum boasts individualized programs in music, reading, and brain training. The school values the uniqueness of each child and promotes self-development in these programs. The latter are approached in a way that makes learning fun. The students are taught how to problem solve and exercise empathy and reason. The school monitors the development of each child on a weekly basis. Devoted teachers receive weekly training and practice responsive nurturing; student to teacher ratio is kept low so that more attention is given to each child. YSA's small campus is a home away from home, allowing your child to easily make the transition to school life.

China World Hotel With bragging rights to being the first super luxury hotel in town, the 716 room China World is an oldie but still a goodie thanks to its attentive service, location in the heart of the CBD and quality food outlets - especially Aria. The lobby is opulent and marble-laden enough for even the most discriminating Carraran and it leads, via an escalator, to the restaurants, offices and luxury retailers of the China World Trade Center. The main conference hall will be closed for renovation from January to March of 2007. Also, the affiliated Traders Hotel (Guomao Fandian) just behind the China World Hotel is a less-expensive alternative for business travelers. RMB 3,000-31,000. Legend

Favorite Thing about the School

We pretty much love everything about YCIS Beijing, but the family-friendly environment is particularly wonderful. Our children wake up excited about going to school.

Favorite Teachers

Amelie loves her teacher Ms. Washko, while Matthew talks about his teacher Chu Laoshi all the time.

Would You Recommend YCIS Beijing?

This is a school for parents who want their children to get the most out of Beijing by benefiting from a bilingual education whilst meeting the criteria of an international curriculum defined by strong values and a character-based school community. The best part about the school is simply how happy our children are to be there. You can't go to this school without seeing a smile on every child's face.

Why YCIS Beijing?

We chose YCIS Beijing for its bilingual education and international curriculum.

Favorite After School Activity

Amelie loves tennis, while Matthew can't wait to get to Year 1 so that he can start doing kung fu.

Favorite School Event

Both Amelie and Matthew loved the rehearsals for the Christmas concerts. They would come home singing every day and were so excited to perform in front of their family.

Favorite Field Trip

The kids' favorite trip was to the Beijing Zoo.

Favorite Charity Project

There are so many events where the children get an opportunity to help less-fortunate kids their own age, such as the ECE Trike-a-thon and Christmas Bazaar. They also have regular bake sales, where all the money goes to the school charity Seeds of Hope.

Favorite Lunch Item

Matthew loves the fruit and Amelie loves the Italian selections.

The Carr Family

Australians Bryan and Sharon Carr have been living in Beijing for five years. Bryan is the CEO of a software company, while Sharon works as consultant and board director at the Australian Chamber of Commerce. They have two kids, Amelie (age 6) and Matthew (5) – both have been attending Yew Chung International School of Beijing for the past eight months. The Carrs shared with us some of their favorite things about their school. Sijia Chen
