A NOTE TO OUR READERS

When the first day of school rolled around and I watched my little girl walk into pre-school for the first time as I waited outside, it took everything not to rush in after her. It wasn't that I thought she was in danger or anything. It was just so hard to let go of my baby as she starts the next chapter of her life and trust that I have chosen the right school with teachers and staff who will look after my daughter with the loving hearts of golden retrievers and protect her from danger like momma bears.

When choosing a school, whether it's for the first time ever, or a new school in a new city, it's easy to fall in love with every shiny, well-equipped campus you see. School tours are designed to show you the best a school has to offer, and marketing materials only highlight what each school is most proud of. Now, it's not to say that you shouldn't believe anything you see or read, but it would be wise to do a bit more research before committing your child to a school. Get all the basic facts about each school by checking out the school profiles or by visiting our website www.beijing-kids.com.

How do you find out more about these schools, you ask? By digging a bit deeper and making use of your (as well as our) connections within the city to get yourself the real scoop.

Every year in our school choice guide we stress to parents that when it comes to choosing a school, the decision is different for each kid. Whether it's the price, distance from home, curriculum, or a really good friend they just can't leave, nothing is more important than your child truly loving her school and connecting with her teachers and peers.

In this year's issue of the annual Jingkids School Choice Guide, we take a look at some real tips from students and parents about attending an international school for the very first time (p. 10) and find out why a few real teens in Beijing chose the school they did (p. 16) because one of your best resources for what a school is really like is talking to its students.

If you're a parent with a special needs child, there are multiple resources at your disposal, including SENIA, an organization comprised of doctors, educators, and parents in Beijing that specializes in special needs assistance for children. We also talk to a special education facility about their mission of inclusivity on p. 100.

And finally, when it comes to international schools, the level of involvement for parents will vary depending on where your child attends. If you've got a tight schedule outside of your child's activities or if school involvement just isn't your thing, it's best to ask the school how much they actually expect the parents to do. Don't sugarcoat the question only to be overwhelmed later on. Check out a few of Beijing's international schools' biggest PTA accomplishments in the past year to get an idea (p. 20).

Beijing Curriculum Guide

What Are All the Options Out There?

One of the first questions that parents choosing an international in Beijing need to decide is the curriculum. Unlike where many of us (parents) will have gone to school, where we probably studied a set national curriculum, Beijing's international schools are free to design their own curriculum (within reason), and the wide range of options can be a bit overwhelming for first timers.

To help you make more informed decisions, we have put together a breakdown of some of the most common curriculums on offer. Please keep in mind that this guide is not meant to suggest that any one curriculum is the best or that any one school implements that curriculum better than the others. Each school interprets and shapes its curriculum in a unique way; so contact school admissions offices for more information.

MONTESSORI

Age group: ECE/kindergarten

Created by Maria Montessori in the early 20th century, the Montessori approach is founded on the belief that every child should be respected as an individual and allowed to learn at their own pace within the prepared classroom environment. Children are usually taught in mixed-aged classrooms rather than grades, and teachers and classroom assistants will create individualized teaching and development plans that foster a child's physical and spiritual learning.

REGGIO EMILIA

Age group: ECE/kindergarten

Reggio Emilia is an innovative approach to early years education in which children are seen as unique, creative individuals who embark on a journey into learning from the moment they are born as part of finding out about themselves, others, and the world around them. Students are active designers of their own educational development based on an environment where they are free to explore and ask questions.

MULTIPLE INTELLIGENCES

Age group: All (primarily kindergarten/elementary)

The multiple intelligences approach to education is based on American developmental psychologist Howard Gardner's proposition that there are multiple types of human intelligence that represent different ways of processing information, including logical-mathematical, linguistic, spatial, musical, and interpersonal. In terms of education, this can mean individualizing teaching to suit different students and teaching important materials in multiple ways. A multiple intelligences approach can be applied to a range of curriculums.

BILINGUAL APPROACH

Age group: All

Less of a curriculum in itself and more of an approach to teaching and instruction, many international schools in Beijing teach in both English and Chinese. The linguistic split varies between schools; it could be 50:50 or 30:70, and students could be taught by co-teachers in different languages or taught in different languages on different days. It is hoped that a bilingual approach will create well-rounded international individuals that are well-equipped to face a job market that often requires skills in multiple languages.

HYBRID CURRICULUM

Age group: All

This type of curriculum can be described as "the best of both worlds." Some schools in Beijing apply a combination of the Chinese National Curriculum and internationally-recognized curriculums such as the IB, English National Curriculum, or American Common Core Standards. This flexible approach to learning helps build students with a broad range of international education experience. Core subjects from the Chinese National Curriculum may be taught, but the overall teaching approach may be more Western.

ENGLISH NATIONAL CURRICULUM

Age group: All

First introduced in 1988, the English National Curriculum sets out the content taught in most key subjects in primary and secondary schools across England and in many schools around the world. The curriculum is highly structured, divided into four "Key Stages" covering ages 5 to 16 (or six including ECE and post-16 A-Level examinations), but is also constantly undergoing development, giving it a high standard of learning. Most students in Beijing who follow this curriculum take IGCSE qualifications at 16 and may then choose A-Levels or the IB Diploma program.

INTERNATIONAL BACCALAUREATE

Age group: All

The International Baccalaureate (IB) has a 52-year history of high-quality international education. Taught at schools around the world and with the IB Diploma recognized by many of the world's top universities, IB is a natural choice for many expat families. IB schools must be authorized and accredited to offer one or all of the following programs: the Primary Years Programme or PYP (ages 3-12), the Middle Years Programme or MYP (ages 11-16), and the Diploma Programme or IBDP (ages 16-19).

DOES IT MATTER?

What's REALLY important when it comes to choosing schools?

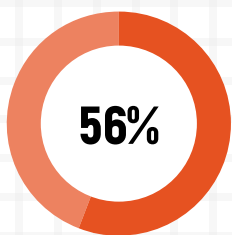

By Mina Yan

What do you look for when choosing a school for your child? Many parents think it's the price and school marketing departments think boasting all the extra curricular activities is the best way to attract potential parents. So, how about we take a look at a few aspects of frequently discussed topics amongst expat parents in Beijing see just how important parents actually find them.

NEW SCHOOL? NEW LIFE?

Navigating your new international school life

By Mina Yan

We often spend a lot of time talking about how to get our young kids ready for school. We mentally prepare them in advance, get them used to the idea of leaving home on a regular schedule, and when the big day comes we hold their hands, drop them off, and loiter around outside looking a bit lost and feeling utterly anxious about them navigating their new social circles on their own. We tell them we want them to learn something new every day, but deep down inside we're just hoping they have fun on their first day of school. We do all of this for our younger kids, but we don't tend to advise the older kids as much when it comes to navigating a brand new social environment. It's as if we expect teens to navigate their new schools effortlessly on their own – like it's easy or something...

On the contrary, the adolescent years are arguably more in need of guidance and help than the younger years. Not only are teens navigating a brand new social scene, they're also dealing with mental and physical changes in their bodies, discovering themselves, and juggling the stress of achieving academic excellence while balancing a range of extra-curricular activities at the same time. When I was young, I would often hear adults say things like "It's so easy to be a student – you don't need to worry about real stress yet," belittling my hard work and, quite often, anxiety. Parents, if you don't already know better than that, it's time to wake up. While your teens don't need to deal with taxes, rent, and horrible bosses yet, their days are filled with just as many grueling expectations as those of any self-made CEOs building their own brand. School just isn't how it used to be, and I'll bet that many of us wouldn't last a month in our kids' shoes.

International schools aren't like anything most of us grew up accustomed to, whether you attended public or private schools back in your home country. Teen Kannika Mehrotra started her high school career in Beijing after her family moved here from India. She says: "Personally, I found my international school to be entirely different from my school back in India. In fact, I would say anyone who hasn't encountered an international school would find it different. Back home, I was enrolled in a reputed public institution, and unlike international school, most of the teachers and students were of the same culture and ethnicity. International schools are very diverse, I was amazed by the diversity of my school. There are teachers and students from almost every part of the globe! Back home, I wasn't used to hearing Chinese, Korean, French, Spanish in the corridors." The cultural melting pot that can be found at every international school offers students one of those unique experiences that no school back home can. Here, you're not attending school with kids you grew up with, you're getting firsthand looks into so many different cultures all at once. By the time you graduate, you're a more worldly global citizen than your friends back home.

Academically, suddenly changing to a faster pace, different curriculum, and an entirely different way of submitting assignments can add on a ton of stress for any child. But if there's one piece of advice that goes unfollowed, it's to speak up and ask for help. And like an international student body that's different from home countries, international schools in Beijing have counselors who have seen kids move to and from Beijing constantly over the years and are prepared to give advice on how to best navigate your new life here. Mehrotra shares: "There were various ups and downs along the way, but I managed to overcome them by embracing the present and by moving out of my comfort zone. The world is not as bad as it looks. Always ask for help if you need it! Don't have friends? Go and talk to people. You will definitely find someone. Having academic issues? Go and talk to your counselor or get a good tutor from your home country! I tried to be as proactive as I could be and approached the right people at the right time whenever I faced any obstacles."

But it's not all about managing stress and finding social balance in high school. We grow up hearing about how the high school years are the best years of your life. High school is the time when you'll run into drama with your friends, deal with an intense amount of academic stress, and face (and learn to overcome) peer pressure and all sorts of insecurities.

Regardless of your high school experience, these are some of the most important lessons in your life. The lessons you learn in high school, academically and socially, help to shape the kind of individual you become when you finally venture out into the world on your own.

We're ONLINE AGAIN!?

How to help kids make the most out of a less-than-ideal situation

By Julie Wolf

Online learning is less than ideal but we need to make the best of it so here are my tips for making sure your child gets the most out of it, if it happens again.

CREATE AN AT-HOME CLASSROOM:

Teachers set up their rooms specifically to maximize focus and efficiency. No distractions from the business at hand in the form of non-educational games or posters and easy access to everything a child might need to be successful. You can do the same thing. Choose a room (preferably not their bedroom) where the student has a desk free of toys or games. It should be near an outlet so they can keep their computer charged.

Create boxes or trays for each subject where they can have the books, notebooks, worksheets, and packets organized and available to them. You can get inexpensive hanging space-saver bags if space is an issue for you. They should also have everything they need as far as pencils, pens, crayons, paper, scissors, etc. set out in front of them and ready to go.

CLEAR THE TECH:

Remove all games from their computer or tablet. It's too easy for them to pretend to be paying attention when they are really playing a game. If it's not needed for school, remove it!

Remove all gaming systems, TVs, or music systems. I cannot tell you the amount of times a student has made an excuse for why they can't open their camera and the second I say "(Insert student name here), turn off the Switch." The student responds with, "How did you know?" These are smart children and good students, but we are dealing with kids. So just remove the temptation.

HAVE A MORNING ROUTINE:

Insist on a schedule. Get up, have breakfast, and put on clothes. Our mental states are different when we are in our PJs than when we are in a suit. Keeping a routine will help give your child a sense that this is still real school and they need to be focused. In addition, the students should not be eating during class. Again, there is a reason teachers don't allow this in school; it's a distraction. If it wouldn't be allowed in the schoolroom, it shouldn't be allowed in your at-home classroom.

GET THEM MOVING:

Recess is pivotal and is provided multiple times a day in most schools. That's because children need to move, not just for their physical health but also for their mental health and focus. A plethora of research conducted by organizations like the National Institute of Health, Boston Children's Hospital, and Yale University tells us that exercise literally changes the brain's biochemistry, resulting in better cognitive function, increased self-control, and higher levels of focus and retention, all of which lead to better academic outcomes.

So please make time throughout the day for physical activity. Take a walk, crank up the tunes and dance or kick a ball outside. Whatever is fun and gets their heart rate up will have a huge impact on their ability to sit through a series of online classes.

ACCOMMODATIONS:

Every student is different. In face-to-face classrooms, teachers are able to more easily adjust to the needs of the students, which can vary from day to day. This is nearly impossible to do through a screen. But there are things you can do to help your student if they have specific needs. Some children need things like fidget spinners or stress balls to help them focus. This is fine, but limit it to one. This is a learning tool, not a toy. Other students may benefit from a biofeedback cushion for their chair (basically the inflatable yoga cushions you see at the gym). If you do decide to add this to your at-home classroom, just make sure the teacher knows so they can be supportive, otherwise they might ask the child to stop playing with their toy.

TAKE FIVE MINUTES:

Preparation is key. Any teacher will tell you that before they start their lesson, they tell the students what they will need and give them a countdown to go and get it, otherwise the children spend the whole class rummaging through bags or cubbies to find things. You can help your child (and the teacher) by taking five minutes before class and making sure your child has their resources. "Ok, you have an English class next. Do you have your book and your guided reading packet? Do you have sharpened pencils, an eraser, and extra paper just in case? Do you have your completed assignment from the last class? Great! Do you need to use the bathroom? Here is your water. Have a great class!"

I know this sounds like a lot, but that five minutes of prep will save 10-15 minutes of wasted class time, and in online learning every second counts.

STAY OUT OF THE VIRTUAL CLASSROOM:

Set your child up for success, log them into the class, and then walk out of the room. Don't feed them answers because 1) that won't help them learn and 2) if you get it wrong it's going to be embarrassing for everyone (yes this happens... pretty frequently).

It's natural to be curious about what is happening in your child's class BUT imagine if you were suddenly being watched and evaluated at your job by 20-30 extra people who all want to give you tips and advice despite having never worked in your field. You would never tell a surgeon how to operate or a chef how to roast a chicken. This is no different. Trust your child's educator. Teachers are highly trained, skilled professionals and this is a stressful time for them. If they have remained in China during this period, they are also supremely qualified and highly devoted to their students. This brings me to my final point.

CUT YOUR TEACHER SOME SLACK:

Your child's teacher have no say in when school can start. While it might feel like you're doing something by sending them a quick text, it's only adding to everyone's frustration. Please stop asking us to give your child "extra attention" or "private help," because 1) we aren't allowed to, 2) it wouldn't be fair to the other students, and 3) we just don't have the time.

We hate this just as much as you do and want to get back to in person as fast as possible. Online learning is a lot of extra work for us. Not only are we cut off from most of our classroom resources like printers and professional libraries, but we had to rewrite most of our lesson plans really fast because some things just don't work online. We have to put together take-home packets, figure out how to grade fairly considering the complicated situation, tackle tech issues both for ourselves and for the students, and figure out how to keep the kids engaged and focused through a screen. Add to this that many teachers have children of their own whom they are trying to help with online schooling too, and it's a perfect stress storm.

Parents, I know you are stressed out too and eager to get back to in-person classes. Trust me when I say your teachers want that too. But this is the situation and we need to partner with each other to make sure our children are getting the most out of it. We will keep showing up with a positive attitude and focused lessons. Help us out by giving your kids the best environment for success.

WHAT ARE YOU DOING AFTER SCHOOL?

Two international schools discuss the importance of their after school offerings

By Vivienne Tseng-Rush

Real learning happens all the time, inside and outside of the classroom. Thus, what a school offers in terms of co-curricular activities or extra curricular activities after the school bell rings for the last time in a day, should be taken into consideration as much as its curriculum. But with such a plethora of after school activities available these days, which ones should we pick? Two international schools choose one of their after-school programs to talk about at length, to elucidate us on its benefits.

Director of Activities Simon Parker and Aquatics Director Nic Wilson at the International School of Beijing (ISB) spill the deal on their Swim program.

Tell us about the Swim program and what makes it attractive for students to join.

The ISB Swim program offers each student an opportunity to learn swimming, water safety and other aquatics disciplines in physical education classes.

As well as our curriculum offerings, the after-school swimming program provides opportunities for swimmers to develop further, with early years 'Learn to Swim' offerings as part of the ASA program, as well as development and competitive offerings, both regionally and internationally, in our year-round ISB Swim Academy. There are also seasonal swim opportunities for Elementary School (Season 1), Middle School (Season 3) and High School (Season 2), with the jewel in the crown for the High School swim team being the APAC Championships each year.

The swimming program fosters a caring and supportive environment. Students feel comfortable in specially designed programs that are differentiated, not only to motivate excellence, but also to allow all students to reach goals and their full unique potential.

How would you describe and rate ISB's facilities and teaching support for swimming?

ISB has a world class swimming facility, which has been designed to allow for its diverse aquatic offerings, and fully supports all aspects of the program, from early years swimming to the hosting of major international swim meets.

Our dedicated Aquatics department, consisting of our Aquatics Director and 4 full-time swimming instructors, offers professional coaching and instruction to our ISB community. The collective international teaching and coaching experience of this group allows us to support and guide our swimmers in all areas of their swimming experience, whether a beginner or an elite performer.

What awards or certifications has this program and its students received over the years?

It is important to emphasize that accolades and awards are not the focus of any of the sporting programs at the school, and all participation at any level is centered around the core ideals of "Commitment, Respect and Fun." We strongly believe that when we do these things well, all our Dragons will experience success, in one way or another.

Over recent years, our ISB swimmers have shared some very special achievements, either individually, or as part of the larger team group:

- In the 2018-19 academic year, based on meet results and times across the year, ISB was declared the #1 International School Swim Team in the world, by the International School Aquatics association.
- Over the COVID Pandemic period ISB was instrumental in developing a unique virtual swimming competition opportunity (Global Virtual All Stars), where swim programs from around the world competed in their own pools, with results being combined to achieve overall standings. ISB ended up as the winners in this global showpiece, that brought together more than 30 schools from around the world.
- The ISB HS Swim Team has won an unprecedented 18 APAC (Asia Pacific Athletic Conference) titles since the competition began.

British School of Beijing (BSB) Shunyi has chosen the Eco-Committee Co-Curricular Activity (CCA) which is overseen by Assistant Head of Primary Emma Brown and Year 6 teacher Anna Warman.

Tell us about the Eco-Committee co-curricular program and what makes it attractive for students to join.

The British School of Beijing (BSB) Shunyi's Eco-Committee is made up of a group of dedicated students that work on making our school more environmentally friendly. Each year students complete a rigorous application, showing their passion and dedication to the environment. These students then work incredibly hard putting changes in place, running events and educating students (and staff!) about important issues. Students love being part of the Eco-Committee because they can make a real difference - both to our school, our community and the environment. As the future leaders of our planet, it is important that students are well-educated on these issues so they can work hard to make our planet a better place.

How would you describe BSB Shunyi's facilities and teaching support for the Eco-Committee?

The Eco-Committee has been running for many years and is a strong force for change in our school. The student leaders play a huge role in making changes at BSB, for example they installed bird feeders around campus after conducting an audit on our biodiversity. They also ran many fund-raising days using the proceeds to support charities, and recently also purchased plants for our classrooms to ensure our facilities are as environmentally friendly as possible.

Our teachers are also very supportive, running other co-curricular programmes such as 'Roots and Shoots' and 'Green-fingers Club' that support and continue the work of the Eco-Committee. Our Chef and Food Committee are also highly supportive, implementing 'Meat-free Mondays' and reducing single-use plastic in our canteen. One of our popular Eco-Committee events in the canteen is the House Food Waste Competitions with all Houses competing to see who can waste the least food and what we can do to reduce food waste - an important lesson for everyone about how much food is thrown away each day.

What accomplishments has the Eco-Committee achieved?

BSB wants our students to be empowered to make a difference in their local communities and globally. Our partnership with UNICEF helps us do this by developing learning materials based on the UN's 17 Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs) that allow students to think practically about how to effect real change in ongoing projects.

We are proud to support CNN's Call to Earth Day, a global event that joins forces with schools and organisations across the world to raise awareness of environmental issues and conservation education. The biggest event in our calendar is Earth Week, with the whole school spending the week celebrating our planet and learning about important environmental issues. The Eco-Committee ran assemblies for every year group that were fun and interactive. They also led activities and workshops throughout the week, such as planting new trees and plants in our garden, making recycled art and carrying out environmental audits. Other fun activities included dressing in green to raise money for environmental charities, having lessons outdoors and having parts of the week that were completely electricity free. We're already excited about Earth Week 2023!

WHY ARE YOU HERE?

The real reasons why these students chose their schools

By Vivienne Tseng-Rush

Parents may research, visit school campuses, and write extensive pro/con lists, but ultimately the education a school provides is for our children, and they have to be on board with the choice. When it comes to older kids, we as parents may even choose to take a step back and let them come to us with their decision, pending our approval of course. (After all, we do pay the school tuition fees.) The following teenage students tell us the reasons, in their own words, why they chose to attend the school they do.

Oscar Tsui,

Tsinghua International School, Grade 11

Granted, it's not the largest campus or the loudest name, but it wins me over in the East-or-West game. Situated in the campus of Tsinghua High School west of Beijing, it literally is closer to home: Rooted in Chinese culture of the East whilst bridging that of the West, it is – figuratively, too – closer to home. More than that, there are loving teachers and lovely friends, all in a tightly integrated community that, by the way, incorporates the AP curriculum – not that I considered any of these when I enrolled in 5th grade ... but what more can I ask for?

XueFei Liu,

Beijing City International School (BCIS), Grade 12

I chose BCIS because of its countless opportunities. While providing academic rigor, BCIS also allows me to explore my passions outside of academics. I've founded various clubs (such as a cappella and candle making) thanks to the support and resources BCIS provides.

BCIS's mission is unique, allowing me to empower others and inspire others for the sustainable development of the world. It's meaningful to become a part of a community that serves the world, and I'm glad I did.

Alice Cantarutti,

No. 55 International School, Grade 9

I chose 55 because it is downtown and super convenient. Most of my elementary school classmates also went to 55 so it was nice to start middle school with some familiarity. There are many subjects, which allows you to find what you really enjoy learning – in my case I love humanities. 55 also focuses a lot on CTC (Chinese traditional culture): We learn calligraphy, Chinese diabolo, drums, etc. The teachers are very nice and make classes very enjoyable. The classes are taught in English with IB system so it works out perfectly.

Jacob Kennedy,

AISB-Hope International, Grade 9

I did not personally decide to enroll at AISB-Hope International; however, I am thankful that my parents enrolled me in 2014. They decided on AISB because of the strong focus on character, standing out from other schools in Beijing. It has been nearly nine years at AISB, and I prefer it to any other school. I admire the teachers for striving to create a secure environment for each individual. I have ten classmates, which I believe is beneficial. First, we all know each other and have close relationships with each other. Furthermore, there are no tryouts for sports; teams are often small and have the bare minimum of substitutes. Also, many of my friends have come and gone throughout my years at AISB-Hope, but those I keep in contact with agree that AISB is, above all, the best school.

Jasper Roscher,

German Embassy School of Beijing, Grade 12

When we – my family and I – left Bavaria for Beijing in summer of 2021, we had to decide which school my three siblings and I would attend. For me, it was important to attend a school where I could receive the German Abitur, the diploma you get after completing the German school system, to easily get access to universities in Germany, where I plan on studying after leaving school (mainly because universities are comparatively inexpensive in Germany; for German citizens, attending one even is almost completely free). So, I have been attending the German Embassy School of Beijing for almost eighteen months now.

Emma Sortais,

Lycée Français International de Pékin (LFIP), Grade 11

I've attended the French International School of Beijing since I arrived in China when I was just 3 years old. We chose this school for many reasons. The first one would be to keep my French roots and grow in a French community. As I left France at a very young age, it was really important for my parents to transmit to me the French culture and language – a culture that I couldn't have discovered elsewhere.

I stayed in this school because it follows the French program, which allows me to later study or work in France. It also offered great opportunities like learning various languages like English, Chinese, Spanish, or German. We really enjoyed the possibility of choosing the British International section, allowing me [to have] a double diploma, a real advantage for my future. I also chose to stay because I felt comfortable in my school overall.

INTERNATIONAL SCHOOLS... WHAT'S THE HYPE?

Does attending an international school make you special?

By Rachel George

When choosing a school, there are various factors to consider. Not only do you want your child to be happy and supported, but the quality of education also comes into play. How will they fare in college? What does their future success look like? These are all valid questions.

Some of the most common questions I receive as a counselor are "What are the benefits of an international school education? Why should I choose X international school over a local school?" Although choosing a school is a personal family decision, what I've found is that overall, parents want their child to be prepared to live, work, and thrive in an increasingly globalized world.

According to the Center for the Advancement and Study of International Education, for our children to succeed in life, we have to take into consideration more than academics, preparing them for a fast-paced, ever-changing world.

So what does that mean, really? Having worked as a school counselor for 16 years, and five years internationally, I believe it means:

Students will need to know how to think holistically. Adapt to new social changes. Think ahead to what could possibly occur and plan accordingly. Work independently and with others from various backgrounds and cultures and realize the interconnectedness of it all. They will need to know how to manage their stress levels and express themselves confidently. Empathize with others who are different than they are, and stand up for causes they believe in.

How do we prepare our children to do just that? Choosing an international school may help. Let me explain.

International Schools Are Rich In Diversity:

From a diverse community of peers to an international alumni network, studying at an international school provides a unique experience.

A community of peers from all over the world means that not only are different cultural backgrounds and viewpoints represented, but that the kids are exposed to various languages, ways of problem-solving, customs, and traditions. These factors enrich students' social, emotional, and academic development – encouraging them to take on a more complex worldview, and ultimately making them more equipped to navigate an ever-changing global society.

Graduating from an international school and attending college in the US has made it easier for me to navigate getting along with different people. I understand and appreciate different views and opinions, and I have grown more confident in what I believe.

International Schools Adopt an Internationally Recognized Curriculum:

Academic excellence is at the heart of any great international school. That's why they offer smaller class sizes and create an environment that attracts and retains highly qualified teachers from all over the world.

With various curricula including International Baccalaureate, British curriculum, Cambridge iGCSE, A levels, and Advanced Placement courses, international schools provide a globally recognized education accepted by universities and employers around the world. It also means your child can move almost seamlessly from one school to another if you move to a different country.

Yes, test scores are important, but educating the whole child, heart and mind, is even more so. We want them to be good humans, right? International school education supports students holistically – focusing on academics and social/emotional development, oftentimes with the addition of robust mentoring programs. These multiple layers of support lead to “students feeling supported and paid attention to. Part of what makes international schools different is their emphasis on educating the whole child,” says Michelle Chow-Liu.

But what about college acceptance? Is there an advantage when it comes to college admissions?

This is the question most parents want answered. College acceptance is more than test scores and a stellar transcript. International schools provide the rigor, and perhaps more importantly they challenge students to be curious and inspire students to make a difference in the world beyond the classroom. Students think independently and critically and find their own voice – perfect preparation for those college essays!

Colleges look at the well-roundedness of potential students and what characteristics they bring to the school population. Are they a risk taker? Have they shown an interest in community? What are their leadership qualities? International schools provide multiple opportunities for students to grow into service leaders, wherever their futures may take them.

Whether your school search decision leads to an international school or not, remember to engage your child in the process. Ask them to make a quick list of what is important to them in a teacher. What kind of environment do they work best in? What are their hopes for their new school? What do they believe will help them be successful? What interests do they have, or want to explore? Every child is unique, with different strengths, passions, and ways of learning. Having their answers in mind before you begin your search will help you find the perfect place where your child will flourish – personally, socially and academically.

Michelle Chow-Liu, President of International Association for College Admissions Counseling, agrees, noting that students graduating from international schools are “chameleons – and can blend in and out of different groups while also finding familiarity. They are able to see and respect various aspects of others and themselves. Having that exposure opens minds.”

The Power of Parent Boards in Schools

What exactly is the role of the PTA?

By Vivienne Tseng-Rush

There's more to a school than just its top-notch facilities and qualified teachers. After all, a school may only be as good as its students. To that effect, the students' parents play a key role in shaping the tone of the entire school atmosphere as well. In the following interview, jingkids speaks to the leaders of the parent boards in Beijing's top international schools to find out more about the work they do.

Q: How did you get involved with the parent board?

Eyal Kovo, Parent Link Chair,
Western Academy of Beijing (WAB)

"When we first arrived, I volunteered to be the room parent representative of both my kids' classes because I felt that this would be the best way to get involved and familiar with WAB and also meet new parents. After that, I was 'WABed' and kept my involvement at WAB. This year I was elected as PL chair."

Dana Lattanzio, PTA President,
International School of Beijing (ISB)

"This is our family's fifth year at ISB. I was voted onto the PTA Executive Committee in 2019, where I served two years as VP of Events. Last year I served as one of the Elementary School reps. With these three previous years of experience, I felt confident in running for PTA president. I'm happy to say I am enjoying my role and the efforts we make for the school."

Shu Qi, PTA President,
Beijing City International School (BCIS)

"I joined BCIS-PTA in 2019 as a new parent after my family moved to the BCIS community, and was nominated as the executive to organize and manage the weekly book club of the PTA, which by the way is still going on greatly after three years. I was privileged to be nominated by other PTA executives and the school board after the previous president resigned."

Julie Zhu, FOD Chair,
Dulwich College Beijing (DCB)

"Before I became the chair of Friends of Dulwich (FOD) three years ago I was parent representative for KS3 (Y7, Y8, Y9) for two years, and I applied to be co-chair with another parent, Susie, who became close a friend later. After she left Beijing, I continued to be the chair of FOD until now."

Q: What is the objective of the parent board?

Kovo: Parent Link provides a link between parents and the school and aims to build a stronger community for the benefit of everyone: our children, families, and the school. We also support others who are less fortunate than ourselves through fundraising and charitable work. The last three years have been strenuous for parents, with online learning and uncertainty which forced us to find alternative ways of connecting the parents with WAB. That didn't change our main calling, which is to bring our community together in support and connect the parents with the school.

Lattanzio: The main objective of the PTA is to be a positive conduit between the school and parent communities.

Qi: BCIS-PTA's vision, mission, and strategic plans alter along with the growth and development of our school and community. The current mission statement includes but is not limited to promoting and enhancing the international character and values of the education offered at BCIS, and forging a unified, vibrant, caring community in support of student education.

Zhu: The Friends of Dulwich parent association aims to build bridges between families, the school, and our wider community, and by doing so, enhance the school experience for our children.

Q: What events/activities did the board organize in 2022?

Kovo: We were lucky enough to have several coffee mornings in which parents met with the PL team and the school's leadership, as well as had time to socialize with other parents, new and returning. These events are important in connecting parents with school after a long period of online learning.

Lattanzio: In recent years while we navigate school life with Covid, our PTA has gotten more creative in how we can still fulfill our mission. Specifically, this semester the PTA held five different parent breakfasts off-campus. In addition to these popular breakfasts, we organized a dumpling cooking lesson and lunch at Din Tai Feng.

Qi: Terry Fox Run, Spring in the City, Christmas Bazaar, Roundabout Book Fair, weekly classes and clubs, and other outings.

Zhu: This past year we managed to run annual activities like fundraising to gift red packets to cleaning and security staff in the school before the Spring Festival. In the midyear, we organized a lunch for all the teachers, to show our appreciation to them. We also have the Culture Club that puts together activities like visiting historical places and hiking in the mountains. There were several parent coffee mornings/lunches, regular badminton and choir practices, and we even started a new dance club!

Q: What events/activities does the board hope to organize in 2023?

Kovo: We have several events planned for the coming spring/summer such as Staff Appreciation Day and the end-of-the-year fun fair, which is organized by Parent Link.

Lattanzio: Over the years, our parent community has enjoyed various art lessons (painting, jewelry making, etc.) and unique shopping trips around Beijing. We also hope to reschedule a visit to the Dewey Center for their featured art installment. In 2023, we hope to organize our annual Spring Fair.

Qi: We are aiming to organize more charity events, including silent auctions, parent talent shows, and interactive events among all our community members to provide more accessibilities for our community members to contribute their vision, perspectives, and talent to the amazing BCIS community.

Zhu: There are two major events that we hope to bring back in 2023: the Moonlight Madness, which is an outdoor picnic where student groups put on a show for their friends and parents outdoors, as well as the Founder's Day gala, which is a big event that pulls in sponsors to raise funds for charity.

Q: What do you wish for the new school year?

Lattanzio summed up all our interviewees' wishes in hers: "For the new school year, my wishes surely resemble those of other parents. We have a very solid parent community and we want to engage with them as often and as safely as possible." She also added that "ISB's PTA Executive Committee is a committed group of parents who will continue to offer creative opportunities to promote our school spirit. Go Dragons!"

A young woman with long brown hair and glasses is the central figure. She is wearing a purple and grey patterned sweater and has her right arm raised, resting her hand on her head. The background is a vibrant, abstract composition of pink, purple, and blue light streaks and bokeh. Little Pace Courtyard Preschool

Nestled in a tranquil Hutong courtyard in the old town of Beijing, Little Pace endeavors to create a natural, personal, and international-local experience for little dwellers between 2.5 – 6 years old. They offer the smallest class in town where genuine friendship and bonding are reinforced among all members of the group. As a member school of the American Montessori Society (AMS), they transcribe the international curriculum into a traditional Chinese homeschool setting where both the hundred-year-old house and the small private yard are a workspace for students to explore. When the weather is good, the children can come in and out freely to enjoy the peaceful yard and get close to nature. Little Pace understands that early childhood education is more about influencing the initial cognitive formation of the self and the world through everyday experience than just passing on specific knowledge and facts. Their students are immersed in arts, traditional culture, and a natural pace of life. They respect the development pace of each child and facilitate children's growth according to individual characters and temperaments. The lead teacher is a PhD mom who specializes in psychology and arts.

HERE TO HELP!

SENIA and Auesome Place's Special Mission for Inclusivity

By Vivienne Tseng-Rush

We say that every child is special and deserves our undivided attention. But modern education favors standardized curricula and tests that don't necessarily allow every student's needs to be considered. That's why it's so important that every society carve out a safe space for the truly special to excel at their own pace. We take a look at the organizations that support that mission right here in Beijing.

The Special Education Network and Inclusion Association (SENIA) is a network of educators, professionals, parents, and students who support and advocate for differently abled individuals. They work to advocate for and provide resources and support to individuals with disabilities in the hope that we can live in an inclusive world where every individual is supported, resources are accessible, potential is maximized, and action is inspired.

SENIA-Beijing Chairman Gerald Anthony, who is also Director of Scholarships and Awards for SENIA International, says: "We would like to thank the over 500 members that make up SENIA-Beijing and all those that partner with us to make our community one amazing place to live. SENIA-Beijing has been around for 20 years, and from that we know the difference a small network can make to a community.

"This year of 2022 has been one to remember for SENIA-Beijing. We had several memorable moments that have allowed our organization to influence our community at even greater levels. We were able to participate in a global conference focusing on topics under the umbrella of well-being, particularly from the context of schools in China. The TeachBetter Series was a partnering with Venture Education, SENIA-Beijing, and tertiary institutions to assist with developing families and professionals.

"There were also special moments with students. We now have two Beijing students that have received the SENIA World Changer Award, an international award for the great work individuals do toward promoting inclusivity in their communities. In general, our scholarship and award allowances have grown from the support of our conferences and local events.

"One of the highlights is our local community outreach. Partnering with Auesome Place, SENIA-Beijing held its first citywide inclusive art exhibition entitled 'Autum's Fairytale.' We hope this will continue in the future."

Mr. Zhang Yuxiang is the founder of Auesome Place, an educational organization catering to special needs youths from Beijing's expatriate families and the local community alike. We spoke to Mr. Zhang about the creation of Auesome Place.

"I studied special education at Minnesota State University as a graduate student, and I have been engaged in related work in international schools in China and abroad," shares Mr. Zhang. "Over the years, I have met many parents and students who have additional learning needs. In many cases, the needs of these children are not well accommodated in mainstream schools and programs. These parents hope that there will be a place which is more targeted to help their children from the perspective of the curriculum. I managed to start Auesome Place with the help of a well-established foundation that reached out to us because they found that such a program is very meaningful, and wanted to fulfill this dream.

"Auesome Place hopes to build a 'medical education platform' to better help children with additional learning needs to improve their cognitive ability, language ability, social-emotional awareness, as well as their knowledge of mainstream subjects. The so-called 'medical' part here refers to various intervention methods, such as speech therapy and behavior analysis, etc. 'Education' is much easier to understand – we select the subject content that is suitable for our students' current cognitive level and learning level, and combine them with their individual education plans through teaching with a high teacher-student ratio."

What challenges did you encounter in starting Awesome Place?

"Countless, countless challenges. The first is that many Chinese parents tend to avoid talking about special educational needs, or just completely deny its existence. In our culture, acknowledging that something is wrong is akin to losing face. Raising social awareness on special education is not easy. Another challenge is the lack of resources to provide high-quality special education. Chinese society only started to recognize autism in early 2000. Many local universities still do not offer majors related to special education, which leads to a shortage of practitioners. The government may also need to be more involved in the construction of special education. Of course, all these challenges are also opportunities and potential for future development."

So how does Awesome Place differ from other special education centers in Beijing?

"To answer this question, we need to talk more in-depth about the 'combination of medical therapy and education.' Currently in mainland China, mainstream schools are in charge of 'education' and special education centers are responsible for the 'medical therapy' part. But the current practice has many drawbacks, such as the time it takes for students to transfer from school to the special education center for interventions. Furthermore, the individualized learning plans are designed by the special education centers, but need to be implemented by schools. Is their educational philosophy aligned? Who is going to evaluate the implementation of IEPs [Individualized Education Programs]? At Awesome Place, students spend half of their day on subject-based knowledge learning: language, life-related mathematics, etc. They spend the other half on different interventions such as music therapy, physical therapy, as well as psychological intervention. We are still exploring this path, but we believe it is the right one. Another thing that distinguishes Awesome from other education centers is our 'environmental approach.' We think many of the social obstacles that our students are facing are actually caused by the lack of social opportunities and low self-esteem. Therefore, we believe that the influence of the environment will have a very positive effect on their growth and the accumulation of self-confidence. After-all, inclusive education is not a specific program, it is not a classroom in our school and it is not a favor that we do for someone. Inclusion is who we are."

Not All Heros Wear Capes

Beijing's international schools nominate their unsung heroes

By Vivienne Tseng-Rush

We are all taught from young to thank our teachers at school for all their hard work. But it's easy to neglect those who work behind the scenes to ensure that the school's operations continue smoothly every day, for example the IT staff who are increasingly responsible for the school's connectivity and digital presence, or the school medical staff, who have the noble job of holding our kids' hands through whatever pain and discomfort they may experience. These individuals, who don't often get the acknowledgement they deserve, are the unsung heroes in our children's daily lives. This article is our small way of saying "We see you" and "Thank you" to them.

Ms. Cheng Yaqin, Beijing No. 55 High School International Students Section, School Doctor since 1999

"Always there for us"

Not only does she help our students with any minor injuries and illnesses, she has also worked tirelessly throughout the epidemic to rise to its many challenges. Her presence in the school always brings a calming air and helps everyone to feel safe and secure. She exceeds our expectations any time we need help. Ms. Cheng Yaqin is almost like our school's very own Doraemon, and she is an irreplaceable treasure for the staff, students, and parents at No. 55. Jia you, Ms. Cheng Yaqin!

*Mr. Hongze Niu, AISB-Hope International,
Head of Logistics & Maintenance since 2012*

"Ready to help with a smile"

Whenever we need him, he is always ready to help with a smile on his face. In addition to his title, Mr. Niu also serves as one of our bus drivers. Mr. Niu goes above and beyond to serve the school. He can turn a gymnasium into a concert hall for performances. He is available with the right tools for whatever we need to have done for everyday maintenance and for those special events throughout the school year. His commitment to the school has made him a valuable team member of AISB-Hope International.

Vivian Liu, House of Knowledge International Kindergarten, Nurse since 2021

Vivian's dedication and love for House of Knowledge can be seen in her enthusiastic attitude coming to work every day with a great smile, a kind, loving, and contributing heart, as well as her very experienced and professional work ethic in doing whatever is best for a child's health and growth. Vivian loves children and she has been doing a great job to ensure all the children are in the best "health shield" on campus, especially during the Covid-19 pandemic.

Data Office Team, Dulwich College Beijing

"The Engine Room"

Working behind the scenes at Dulwich College Beijing (DCB) is our Data Office Team, whose dedication and hard work enables the school to continue running like a well-oiled machine. In addition to overseeing the different complex data systems that support DCB's academic activities, the team also manages and processes the collection of the students' data and compiles this into the thousands of DCB reports – from Nursery to Year 13 – sent out to parents. Yet despite the tasks and pressure, this extremely efficient team maintains an amazingly upbeat spirit and is always keen to share their knowledge with our community. Thank you so much to our Data Office Team!

Kun Jiao, Western Academy of Beijing, Alumni Link since 1996

"The anchor between our past and present"

In her 28 years at Western Academy of Beijing (WAB), Kun Jiao, or Kun Kun, has worn numerous hats, but Alumni Relations is where you can see her passion shine through. Keeping track of WAB graduates around the globe is not an easy task, but Kun is the anchor that keeps our alumni community connected and engaged. She also builds and maintains relationships with many parents and community partners. Her contributions are too numerous to list here and we hope she stays with us for another 28 years!

Terence Zhang, Chaoyang Kaiwen Academy IT Engineer since 2017

With the spread of the pandemic, online classes have become one of the main teaching methods. To ensure smooth and efficient online communication between teachers and students, Terence always adheres to the principle of timely communication and always solves technical problems for teachers and parents as soon as possible. Terence always takes the initiative to learn with an attitude of "knowledge is infinite" and requires himself to see the pain spots that can be solved by IT technology more quickly than others.

Lily Chen, 3e International School, Hygiene Manager and School Tailor since 2008

One of 3e's longest serving staff members, with over 14 years of experience, Ms. Lily Chen personifies the 3e spirit every day with her cheery, helpful attitude and caring, loving nature. Not only is she manager of 3e's cleaning staff team and a skilled tailor, she also spreads her many talents across roles including bus ayi manager, classroom support ayi manager, stockroom manager, classroom nap time support person, and event supporter. Ms. Lily's dedication, professionalism, enthusiastic willingness to help anyone in need and friendly smile make her a joy to work with, and an invaluable 3e team member!
